Nazi Leader of Free City Arrives At Fuehrer's Chalet For Conference

Army Council Reported

By International News Service

Berlin, Aug. 7.—Berlin's diplomatic colony tonight heard a rumor that Fuehrer Hitler has summoned his military chieftains into a special conference on the Danzig question tomorrow or Wednesday, but the report lacked any confirmation in German government circles.

It was circulated after word from Munich related that Danzig's Nazi Party leader, Albert Forster, accompanied by an aide, arrived by plane this evening at the Obersalzburg airfield of Hitler's Bavarian mountain chalet.

Responsible German quarters intimated that important decisions regarding the Free City are not likely to be taken at the present moment by the Fuehrer, who has demanded the restoration of German sovereignty over Danzig.

Harvest Not Gathered

They point out the German harvest has not been gathered, although it will be in two or three weeks, and that the German army is just beginning to deploy for the biggest autumn maneuvers in the Reich's history.

Admitting that Hitler's decisions are matters on which it is hazardous to venture predictions, these quarters, nevertheless, expressed the feeling the Feuhrer would wait until the harvest is in and the military maneuvers are at their peak before he chooses the moment for liquidation of the Danzig problem.

The significance of Forster's visit could not be accurately gauged. Experienced observers cautioned against overestimating it. It was believed the Danzig Nazi chief merely sought Hitler's advice relative to the customs dispute between the Free City Senate and Poland.

Curb on Poles Withdrawn

Warsaw, Aug. 7 (AP).—The Danzig Senate, governing body of the Free City, has withdrawn an order restricting the activities of Polish customs officials, it was announced here tonight.

A communique declared regulations by non-Polish customs officers in Danzig lacked authority of the Senate.

It was declared the Senate also had assured Polish authorities there is no intention of presenting Poland

Army Revives Rank Of Lieut. General, Promotes Four

By the Associated Press

The Army, acting under legislation just signed by President Roosevelt, has advanced four of its officers to the revived World War rank of lieutenant general.

The four are:

First Army—Major General Hugh A. Drum, headquarters, New York.

Second Army—Major General Stanley H. Ford, Chicago.

Fourth Army—Major General Albert J. Bowley, San Francisco.

Luxemburg Royalty To Visit Roosevelts

President and Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain another royal party this summer, it was revealed yesterday.

The State Department announced that Prince Consort Felix of Luxemburg and Crown Prince John have accepted an invitation to spend a short time as guests of the Chief Executive and Mrs. Roosevelt either at Hyde Park or at the White House. The royal pair will arrive in this country the latter part of this month.

Riot Reported As Italy Tries to Oust Germans

Fascist Chamber Gets Law Providing for Exodus to Reich

By International News Service

London (Tuesday), Aug. 8.—Bloody fighting was reported from Italy's south Tyrol today in a Vienna dispatch published by the News-Chronicle.

The dispatch said the fighting resulted from bitter resistance by German-born Tyrolean peasants against Fascist authorities who ordered them to evacuate their lands and homes and move into Germany.

There were "dead and wounded on both sides," news reaching Vienna stated, according to the dispatch.

Law to Clear Tyrol

Rome, Aug. 7 (INS).—Premier Mussolini and three of his cabinet ministers tonight presented to the Fascist chamber a law granting "permission" to German-born citizens of Italy's south Tyrol to return to Germany.

The law, tantamount to an order for a vast exodus of Tyroleans from Italy's northern province to a land most of them have never seen, will affect some 200,000 inhabitants of the Italian Tyrol. It is the result of an agreement reached between the governments of Mussolini and Fuehrer Hitler.

The measure was presented to the Chamber jointly by Mussolini, Foreign Minister Ciano, Justice Minister Grandi and Finance Minister Dereval.

The law applies to all those "of German origin and language who acquired Italian citizenship through the treaty of St. Gregory (awarding the Austrian South Tyrol to Italy) and who wish to return to Germany and acquire German citizenship."

Persuasion Expected

While this statute gives Tyroleans their choice of leaving or remaining, its practical effect is expected to be the eventual transfer of the overwhelming majority from the South Tyrol to German soil. Armed with the authority of the new law, Fascist officials are expected to persuade many otherwise unwilling Tyroleans to move into the Reich.

Before the terms of the statute became known tonight it had been generally expected that all Tyrolean Germans would be compelled to depart. Local opposition to Fascist pressure in this direction was believed to have caused Mussolini to modify original plans.

Blue Ridge Breathes Easier as Pachyderm Snuggles in Trailer

By the Associated Press

Staunton, Va., Aug. 7.—Two-ton Elsie, fugitive circus elephant, was lured back into captivity today after a safari of 200 police and country folk had stalked her through the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains for a day and a half.

Elsie, footsore and hungry, plodded through the forests south of here for 33½ hours after escaping from a wrecked circus trailer. She walked quietly from the woods with two fellow pachyderms—Alice and Margaret—by her side. They had been freed to entice her from her hideout.

Ready for Her Peanuts

Fright, engendered by the wreck that killed a circus attendant and another elephant, was gone when the fugitive found her mates. She was loaded on another trailer and started on the way to Roanoke, where the circus is showing.

The two elephants whose presence induced Elsie to surrender had been chained in the vicinity, a half-mile north of Mint Spring and a short distance west of Route 11, since early morning. When this failed to attract Elsie, trainers decided to liberate them for the decisive attempt.

Elsie's wild trumpeting subsided to a soft bleat when she sighted Alice and Margaret. She hesitated a moment, then walked to them. She nudged them once or twice and the three started toward the highway a mile away. Elsie needed no prodding to climb into her trailer.

Aerial Search Finds Her

But it was an exciting night and day while it lasted. After the elephant had hidden away yesterday and last night, trampled fences and possibility of greater damage aroused authorities to new methods today. An airplane was brought into service. Elsie soon was spotted not far from where the tractor-drawn trailer, from which she escaped, had gone into a ditch.

The hunters picked up the trail and followed her 4 or 5 miles across country. They didn't get too close, however, because Elsie turned upon three of her more daring pursuers and chased them up a tree.

From then on it was a waiting game until the fugitive decided the jig was up.

In addition to the circus worker, another elephant, "Rubber," was killed in the crash. Elsie's own trainer, Larry White, was injured. He followed the search for Elsie from his hospital room.

U. S. Comes To China's Aid, Buys Silver

$2,000,000 Purchase Timed to Bolster Nation's Morale

By Walter Fitzmaurice.
International News Service Staff Writer.

Moving to the aid of the embattled Chinese government, the United States Treasury in the last week has contracted to purchase 6,000,000 ounces of Chinese silver, it was learned last night.

Treasury officials declined comment on the reported purchase, understood to have been made at a price approximating $2,000,000.

A well informed source said, however, an official confirmation would be forthcoming when the Treasury had assurance the silver was on the high seas, beyond danger of capture by Japanese warships.

Hope to Bolster Morale

The Japanese military in China in the past have commandeered Chinese silver, consigned to American banks.

The newest purchase, diplomatic quarters said, was timed to bolster Chinese morale, shaken by Britain's recent recognition of Japan's "special rights" in China.

These quarters said the purchase may also, in some degree, relieve pressure upon the yuan (Chinese currency), which Japanese money "raiders" have driven down from a peg of 29 cents to a point between 7 and 9 cents in United States currency.

The dollars the Treasury provides, diplomats pointed out, will provide Gen. Chiang Kai-shek foreign exchange to purchase sorely needed war supplies, the transaction giving Japan notice the United States stands firm in opposition to its invasion of China.

Previous reports had represented China's supplies of gold and silver at the point of exhaustion, leading to Japanese predictions that Chiang Kai-shek and the yuan within a few months would go down together.

Forgets Number, Man Phones List At Dime a Call

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 7 (AP).—Many telephone subscribers whose numbers are "78 something" received unexpected calls tonight.

Albert Estes, whose number is 7893, reported "it was a man calling" who "said he was a stranger here."

"He had a friend in Columbia whose phone number is 78 something and the fellow had forgotten the last two numbers.

"He decided the best way to find his friend was to start at 7800 and go right through.

"He told me he had called 43 numbers and was paying 10 cents a call because he was calling from a hotel."

Estes related that he advised the caller to ask "information," but it turned out the number was not in the friend's name.

Ssh! Mrs. Garner Plays Cards, Too! (Don't Tell Lewis)

Dallas, Aug. 7 (AP).—Don't tell John L. Lewis, but Mrs. Garner is a more avid card player than the Vice President.

E. B. Germany, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, told this story today:

"On a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Garner, I walked in the door as they were in what apparently was a family game of rummy.

"When Mr. Garner saw me, he started to gather up the cards and put them away.

"'Oh, no you don't,' Mrs. Garner promptly said. 'I've got you just where I want you. You leave those cards alone; I'm going to beat you.'

"'But we've got company,' protested Mr. Garner.

"'I don't care; we'll just turn the cards face down and put the table aside until the company leaves.'

4 Killed in Crash Of British Bomber

London, Aug. 7 (AP).—A Royal Air Force bomber crashed on a steep cliff on the English Channel at Beachy Head tonight, killing its crew of three and a woman who was walking on the 350-foot precipice. The big twin-motored plane toppled over the cliff and into the surf.

Germans Rescue Two Polish Fliers

Danzig, Aug. 7 (AP).—Two Polish fliers plunged into the Baltic near the peninsula of Hela today and were rescued by the crew of the German steamer Nansestadt Danzig.

Their plane circled over the ship, members of the crew said, while the Poles photographed the vessel.

Franco Jails 1,000 to Crush Counter-Revolt Conspiracies

By the United Press.

Hendaye, French-Spanish Frontier, Aug. 7.—More than 1,000 arrests by Gen. Franco's secret police, in an extension of the Nationalist regime's effort to crush Republican counter-revolutionary activity, were reported tonight.

In line with official announcement in Madrid of the execution of 62 persons, including four women, for the assassination of a major of the civil guard, border dispatches indicated that the arrests and executions had spread to Catalonia and Asturias in the north.

A dispatch from Madrid said Nationalist authorities there were continuing their roundup of "Republican terrorists" and that more court martial trials were expected shortly.

A roundup is under way, the dispatch said, of persons suspected of belonging to a "third group," regarding whose activities dossiers have been compiled. Those executed for the assassination last Thursday of the civil guard major, Isaac Gabaldon, his daughter, Pilar, and their chauffeur, were said to have belonged to the first and second groups of plotters—white-collar conspirators and gunmen.

Many of those reported to have been arrested over the week-end on charges of "aiding the enemy" and who face death or life imprisonment, were accused of helping 50,000 former Republican soldiers who are hiding out in the mountains south of Oviedo and defying Franco's orders that they submit to his regime.

The former Republican soldiers, including fierce Asturian "Dinamiteros," Anarchists and Communists, are dodging through the mountains, living in caves and on food supplied by sympathetic residents of villages.

'Old Jack' Held It

By John G. Norris.
A Staff Correspondent.

Manassas, Va., Aug. 7.—On the spot where Gen. Thomas J. Jackson earned his nickname of "Stonewall," six infantry battalions, with the aid of war planes, captured the strategic hill back of the old stone house near here today.

It was the highlight of the first day's Third Corps field exercises, in which 17,000 National Guardsmen from the District, Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania are engaged. Unit training is the schedule for the first week of maneuvers, to harden the citizen-soldiers for the "big push" next week, when they are to defend Washington against an attack of a "streamlined" division of regulars.

No Gen. Bee Present

Battalions of the First and Fifth Maryland Infantry regiments charged across the old Warrenton turnpike along the path followed by Beauregard's gray-clad troops in the first battle of Bull Run 78 years ago. Opposite them in a cornfield was a simulated force representing McDowell's Union Army, which nearly won the day in 1861. Then the Yankee advance launched at the same time put the Confederates to flight and nearly turned the tide of the battle and war.

No Gen. B. E. Bee was present today, however, to save the day with his famous cry: "Look at Jackson, standing like a stonewall, rally behind the Virginians, boys." Instead an impiement of warfare unknown to their time, plotted the way for the advancing troops. Planes from 104th Observation Squadron of the Maryland National Guard kept the advancing troops informed on the movements of the "enemy."

Planes, Troops Co-operate

In an exercise intended to develop co-operation between airplanes and ground troops, continuous two-way radio communication was kept up and "panel signaling" was successfully carried out. In the latter maneuver, strips of cloth giving code messages were laid out for the plane to read and messages were dropped from the air.

The District Engineers were quite jubilant over their day's work. They stopped the 10-ton tanks of the Danville, Va., unit National Guard "cold" in the caterpillar tracks.

Under direction of Col. John Oehmann the two battalions of the 121st Engineers built various types of tank traps and road blocks to halt the lumbering "field battleships." Majors Ralph Childs and Clarence S. Shields had their men dig trenches which the tanks repeatedly

Leche, Weiss Indicted in 'Hot-Oil' Case

2 Huey Long Heirs, Texan, Accused by U. S. of Violating Petroleum Curb

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Aug. 7.—Reaching high among the political heirs of Huey P. Long, the Federal Government today indicted former Gov. Richard Leche on a charge he profited by $67,000 through illegal "hot oil" operations.

Named with Leche, and accused of making an identical sum through evasion of oil production regulations was Seymour Weiss, New Orleans hotel owner and one time financial right-hand man to the slain "Kingfish." Freedman Burford, wealthy East Texas oil man, and the East Texas Refining Co., also were indicted in this transaction.

Leche Bond $5,000

A second indictment announced today by the Federal grand jury charged Weiss with income tax evasion. Another made a similar charge against Weiss and Louis C. Lesage, former Standard Oil Co. official here. This same jury indicted these men on mail fraud charges a few weeks ago.

Leche, just six weeks out of the Governor's chair, appeared at the Federal Building soon after the indictments and was fingerprinted before being released on $5,000 bond. He declined comment on the case, as did Weiss, who made bond of $15,000. They face possible imprisonment for two years on each of the two oil counts.

The name of New Orleans' Mayor, Robert S. Maestri, who emerged with Leche and Weiss as the rulers of the Long domain after the Senator was shot to death in 1935, appeared repeatedly in the oil indictment, but he was accused of nothing.

Maestri Held Misled

In 1936, when the alleged illegal production occurred, Maestri was commissioner of conservation and as such authorized the order whereby output of certain wells was stepped up. The indictment said he was fraudulently misled by the conspirators and no charge or implication was made against him.

The story set forth in the indictment follows:

In March, 1936, Gov.-Elect Leche met with Weiss, Burford and others to plan a deal whereby production of 13 oil wells in the Rodessa field, near Shreveport, would be stepped up from approximately 5,000 barrels daily to 20,000 barrels daily for several months. This contraband oil was to be run into Texas, in violation of the Connally act, which prohibits interstate movement of illegally produced "hot" oil.

Half-Million Barrels Moved

Burford built a 59-mile pipeline to Longview, Tex., and approximately 480,000 barrels of oil was moved before a Federal court in Texas issued a restraining order.

Burford paid Weiss $48,592.66, representing 10 cents per barrel on this oil, and subsequently paid over $100,000 to Weiss as a commission after the pipeline had been sold for $950,000.

Weiss paid Leche 67 $1,000 bills here in November, 1936, "as his share of the illicit gains and profits of the said conspiracy" and kept a like sum.

Leche was smiling, but noncommital, as he appeared at the Federal Building. He leaned heavily on a cane, used since stricken with arthritis in January. He gave ill health as the reason for resigning.

Gov. Long, who succeeded Leche just as the present political scandals began breaking in late June, declined comment in Baton Rouge.

Roosevelt and the Courts

By William V. Nessly.

President Roosevelt last night harked back to the bitter court reorganization battle that badly split the Democratic Party in Congress, and declared with evidence of much satisfaction that the last of his objectives in that battle now has been attained.

At the same time, without naming any critics, he pointed to attacks by Frank J. Hogan, former President of the American Bar Association, and others on the recent liberal trend in Supreme Court decisions as testifying to his own success in ending "the unwarranted attitude of the Supreme Court" in its "narrow interpretations of the Constitution."

Occasion for the President's statement was his signing of a bill creating the position of administrative officer for all Federal courts, an office similar to one he suggested in his original court reorganization message to Congress more than two years ago.

Other Accomplishments

Other accomplishments listed by the President as having developed from his court fight were:

The retirement law for Supreme Court justices.

U. S. Workers Solicited for Roosevelt Fund

Letters to Agriculture Employes Ask Gifts For Memorial Library

Agriculture Department employes are being solicited for contributions to help build the Hyde Park library which will house President Roosevelt's private papers, it was learned yesterday.

A mimeographed form letter, circulated in the department, explains the library project to employes and informs them that "any contribution you will make will be greatly appreciated by the sponsors and the public generally."

The letter is signed by Charles B. Ingram, assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. At the bottom of the letter is a subscription blank which gives the employe the alternative of attaching his check or writing out a pledge.

Ingram Silent

Questioned about the matter last night, Ingram refused to make any statement. Copies of the letters, he said, were distributed by official messengers to all department employes in Washington, numbering about 10,000, but were not sent to those in the field offices.

Paul H. Appleby, assistant to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, explained that he had suggested to Ingram that he handle the collection of funds for the library among department employes. Asked whether Wallace had given his consent to the solicitation, he replied:

"If it is a question of tying down the responsibility, I will assume it."

$350,000 is Goal

Whether employes in any other Department were being solicited, either indiscriminately or selectively, could not be ascertained. Officials of several departments said they knew of no solicitation in their departments.

A committee of 60 was formed last winter to raise $350,000 to build

Did Judges Bill Pass? Roosevelt, Officials Differ

President Roosevelt created a puzzle for executive and legislative officials last night when he said in his statement on the court reorganization program:

"Since then 23 additional judges have been provided for by the Congress, and a bill authorizing five more awaits my signature."

But officials insist the bill providing five more judges did not pass Congress.

Two Department of Justice officials who had followed closely the progress of the measure in House and Senate expressed surprise at the President's statement, and were positive the bill was lost in the final day's adjournment jam.

Maurice H. Lanman, clerk of the Senate Judiciary Committee, likewise said that while the judgeship bill, by Chairman Ashurst, of that committee, passed the Senate, final enactment was not obtained.

(Officials insisted, however, that the latter bill was not finally passed.)

Enactment of provisions for assignment of judges to areas of congestion.

The law giving the Attorney General right to intervene in private litigation involving constitutionality of Federal statutes, and limitations on lower court injunctions in such cases.

Provisions for direct appeal of constitutionality cases, with precedence over other pending matters.

"It is worth recording," he said, "that today, August 7, 1939, deserves special recognition because it marks

Corporations Urged by Wallace To Study Co-operative Agencies

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 7.—Secretary Wallace tonight asserted the Nation should "build a stronger bridge between democracy and capitalism." One way to accomplish that, perhaps, would be to make our corporations more democratic in form."

In an address prepared for delivery before the American Institute of Co-operation, he told leaders of the agricultural co-operative movement they could draw inspiration and guidance from the experiences of Finland and Sweden.

"They have gradually improved their ways of doing business, keeping both large and small corporations where they appeared to be most efficient and suitable, but turning in certain cases to co-operative organization, and even to government ownership, where neither the corporate nor co-operative form of organization proved adequate," he added.

"As they have done in Sweden and Finland, what we need to do is somehow to build a stronger bridge between democracy and capitalism. One way to accomplish that, perhaps, would be to make our corporations more democratic in form."

"I sometimes wonder what our corporations would be like if in the beginning they had been organized like the co-operatives, with each stockholder having only one vote regardless of how many shares of stock he held and with voting by proxy barred."

Wallace stated he was not suggesting that all corporations switch immediately to that type of organization because such a change would be impossible.

"I believe practical ways of adapting the corporate form more closely to our present-day needs, in keeping with our democratic traditions, can be found, if we really want to find them," he said.

Over the Coffee

ADVICE TO TOURISTS

Tourists, it seems to me, spend too much time gazing raptly at statues and monuments when they sojourn a few days in the Capital. They scrutinize the Washington Monument (2,000,000 of 'em a year) as if it could tell them why Senators act the way they do, and stare at the White House portals as if it were a Delphic oracle apt to blare out the riddle of democracy any minute.

Harlan Miller

Also, tourists devote too much of their precious time to museums and art galleries, not only in Washington, but in every other capital of the world . . .

An experienced traveler can tell you that a visit to a Paris or Berlin department store gives you a sharper slant on the French or Germans of today than hours in the national collections of knickknacks.

* * * *

The smart tourist, of course, ought to do both. But there are limits to what any statue, or 100 statues, can tell you. A hike through a couple of miles of corridors in the Army or Navy buildings (with due attention to signs tacked on the doors) will shed more light on the armed forces than hours spent communing with all the statues of generals in town.

By this time it ought to be plain to every American that our Government is largely run by the committees of Congress. Occasionally one vote in a committee can send not only a Cabinet member, but also the President, sprawling back in their corners near the water bucket.

* * * *

Any tourist can attend any committee meeting, unless it happens to be an "executive" or secret session.

When you see Congressmen deliberating in a committee you have seen something as fundamental as Myrna Loy brushing her teeth or Claudette Colbert putting on her cold cream.

* * * *

There's a half-hearted effort to keep outsiders away from the Government restaurants, but without success. Any tourist who looks hungry can eat in the chaste refectory of the Federal Reserve Board, or in any of the restaurants on Capitol Hill.

I've seen bold tourists hold a reserved table covered with planked steaks in the Senatorial sanctum while Senators sagging at the knees with fatigue were looking for a place to sit down to eat their milk toast.

You've probably seen our warriors ride in parades mounted on frisky horses.

But you've never really seen a general until you've seen him in civilian clothes seated behind a chipped desk in a barren office in the Munitions Building. Most of the doors are kept open at this season in the faint hope of catching a little breeze.

If you walk past twisting your neck quickly from side to side, you can see scores of majors and colonels hard at work until that imaginary whistle blows at 4:29.

* * * *

Probably you're curious about the Diplomatic Corps. Well, it's illegal for you to negotiate a treaty with a foreign diplomat, unless you're Secretary Hull; but there's nothing to stop you from dropping in at the Hungarian Legation to ask an attache how's the chance for a roller skating rink in Budapest, or could an American hotdog stand make a go of it in Belgrade.

* * * *

Even in the quiet season you can attend a matinee of the Dies committee, or an SEC or NLRB or FTC or ICC hearing. You can ask the Census Bureau to look up for you how old your Aunt Lulu was in 1910.

You can wander into hundreds of offices and see whether the men are actually hard at work and earning the $1,760 a year you help pay them, or whether the stenographers are pretty and watching the clocks too much or making too many trips to the water cooler.

Don't ignore the museum displays of Alaskan kayaks, but have a look at flesh and blood Washington, too.

President Felicitates Bolivia on Independence

President Roosevelt telegraphed congratulations to President German Busch of Bolivia yesterday on the occasion of Bolivia's independence day.

"I take pleasure in extending felicitations to Your Excellency in the name of the Government and people of the United States on this anniversary," he wired.

Rayburn Lauds Congress for Achievements

Majority Leader, in Radio Talk, Takes Peacemaker's Role

Defending the first-term record of the Seventy-sixth Congress, House Majority Leader Sam Rayburn last night extolled over the radio its achievements and envisioned a business recovery absorbing 4,000,000 unemployed.

Rayburn conceded there had been "mistakes," but declared much had been done to aid industry and that two measures alone—the social security amendments and the 1939 tax revision bill—"deserved the thanks of the American people."

"In 1939 we stand where we will stand in 1940, as a party, proud of and defending the accomplishments of this Administration," said the Administration's House leader.

Party Schism Ignored

The radio speech, nationally broadcast, made no reference to the Democratic split that had sidetracked lending, housing and neutrality measures and aimed no shafts at members of his party who had joined in coalition with Republicans.

Rayburn appeared again in the role of the party peacemaker who has healed many a Democratic breach in the House of Representatives.

The majority leader earlier yesterday was a White House visitor and declined comment to reporters on his conference with the President. But, he predicted Congress will return next January in "good humor" and the Administration program will go forward.

Other White House callers reported the President in "high spirits" and apparently not depressed by the record Congress had made.

As against the leadership view the lending program will be enacted next session, Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, voiced his personal opinion "it will depend on business conditions."

"If business gets better, putting jobless back to work, the lending program may be forgotten," Byrnes said he believed. "If business gets worse, Congress will lose no time enacting the lending program."

Representative Healey (Democrat), of Massachusetts, said the President was "in fine fettle, and not a bit vindictive."

"He isn't licked yet," Healey added.

In forecasting business improvement and increase in employment, Rayburn claimed beneficial effects from legislation and cited what he said were the three best business barometers.

Durable Goods Sale Up

"During the first half of this year, Federal revenues increased nearly $1,000,000,000, the sale of durable goods was up $500,000,000, and employment among nonagricultural workers increased 1,250,000," he told his radio audience.

He pointed further to relief legislation: "The appropriation bill for WPA provides for reducing the number on relief rolls from 3,000,000 in 1939, to 2,000,000 in 1940, for the reason it is believed that 1,000,000 more people on work relief will be employed in private industry in the fiscal year of 1940 than in 1939.

"It has been demonstrated that when one person on relief is taken into private employment, three people unemployed—not on relief—are employed in private industry. It is our hope and belief that these 4,000,000 people will be absorbed by industry, thus reducing the number of unemployed by 4,000,000 in the year 1940, over 1939."

While Rayburn refrained from criticizing Democratic conservatives who fought Administration measures in Congress, he turned in ful fury against Republicans. He called Dr. Glenn Frank "head braintruster" of the Republican organization, and said that to this good hour, Frank has brought forth no program. He challenged "any unbiased person" to say House Minority Leader Martin "has enunciated a program."

Reforms Held Unchallenged

He charged Republicans advocated only "a return to the old economic order of giving special privileges to the favored few at the expense of the under privileged many." He said "Republicans will not, and dare not oppose outstanding Administration reforms for the simplea reason that these reforms and accomplishments are sound and supported by an overwhelming majority of our people."

Rayburn declared against Government ownership of railroads, and said the transportation bill passed by both houses and still in conference will do much to prevent it.

"We have made mistakes," he said. "Everybody in the Administration admits that. All the things we tried have not worked—as we hoped they would—but we tried, and when one thing has not worked, we have abandoned it and tried something else, if it were sound. All in all, the program of the last seven years is unmatched by any Administration in this Republic in trying to do something for all the people and especially the average man."

Flying LaGuardia May Need Aladdin Lamp Thursday

New York, Aug. 7.—Mayor LaGuardia has on his schedule for Thursday appointments in New York at 7:45 a. m., in Washington at 9:30 a. m., in Chicago at 2:30 p. m., and in New York again at 9:30 p. m. The itinerary calls for three airplane flights.

He is to arrive in Washington at 9:30 for a 15-minute conference with officials of the United States Conference of Mayors, in the Administration Building at the airport.

Appeals Court Weighs Republic Steel Strike Case

Philadelphia, Aug. 7 (AP).—The Third Circuit Court of Appeals reserved decision today on Republic Steel Corporation's petition for dismissal of a National Labor Relations Board order requiring it to rehire 5,000 Ohio workers involved in the 1937 "little steel" strike.

The court gave corporation counsel until August 16 to file a supplemental brief.

House Committee to Honor Rep. Taylor By Unveiling Portrait of Him Today

Rep. Taylor

Representative Taylor (Democrat), of Colorado, 81-year-old chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and dean of the House in age, today will be honored at a portrait unveiling in the House Appropriations Committee room.

The portrait of Taylor, work of the artist John C. Johansen, will be hung in the committee room alongside those of such former chairmen of the committee as the late Speaker of the House Joe Byrns and the late Representative Buchanan, of Texas.

The committee is the only one in Congress that so honors its chairmen in their lifetime.

The portrait is the gift of Colorado farmers in the vicinity of the Taylor Park Dam, which Taylor was instrumental in authorizing three years ago. Taylor said the farmers had ample water supplies this year, and took this means of expressing their gratitude.

"I'm an old man, and everybody's nice to old men," Taylor said, in modestly accounting for the gift and the two-minute ovation he received in the House adjournment night.

The National Association of Manufacturers said today that taxes in Great Britain have climbed 430 per cent since 1913, while in the United States they have risen 640 per cent.

Up to 1924, the association's survey showed, the tax rate in both countries had increased in nearly the same ratio. In the United States, all Federal, State and local taxes were included. In Great Britain, taxes levies by the national government and localities in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Acting Commissioner of Public Works, Col. E. W. Clark, yesterday reported that 45 per cent, or 2,791 of the 6,161 non-Federal projects of the 1938 PWA program, are complete and in use.

Clark also reported that for the first seven months of 1939, PWA had disbursed $327,248,938 in grants and loans for project construction costs. At the same time, applicants put up approximately $400,000,000.

Employment on PWA construction sites reached the 350,000 mark in July, Clark said, and indicated that the 600,000 mark will be passed in the current month.

Senator Maloney (Democrat), of Connecticut, disclaiming any knowledge of "Maloney-for-President" clubs being organized in his State, declared tonight he has no desire for political advancement.

"I think it would be presumption on my part even to talk about it.

"My ambition for public service ends at the United States Senate."

Senator Maloney arrived today to address the National Conference of Catholic Charities.

Chicago, Aug. 7 (AP).—The Federal Government provided one-fifth of the revenues of the 48 States last year, the Federation of Tax Administrators reported today.

Grants to States for such purposes as highways, old-age assistance, National Guard and land grant colleges rose from $37,600,000 in 1920 to $622,500,000 in 1938, the federation said.

Agents Check Shifts in WPA Personnel

Effects of Relief Roll Restrictions Observed For Congress Inquiry

A close watch on WPA personnel changes forced by the 1940 relief act is being maintained by House and Senate relief investigating committees, spokesmen for the two groups disclosed last night.

Chairman Taylor, of the House Appropriations Committee, said his WPA investigating group has retained from 6 to 8 "crack" investigators who will be sent to the field to observe the effects of relief roll restrictions.

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, chairman of the Senate Unemployment Committee, said his group also is observing "how it works out" and may return in December for hearings.

650,000 to Be Replaced

Both Byrnes and Taylor said they thought it should be emphasized that while 650,000 persons who have been on the rolls 18 months or more may be furloughed at the end of this month, an equal number of needy who have had no work at all will be given their jobs.

"Some of those on the waiting list who now will get jobs may be a lot more deserving than many going off who have made a career of relief work," said Taylor.

"I only hope it will induce those going off the rolls to go out and find work in private employment," said the 81-year-old Appropriations Committee chairman. "That was our purpose in making the change and not to inflict hardship. I feel that this country is headed for trouble unless we can stop relief being used as a career and encourage private job finding again."

Taylor said House WPA committee investigators also are under instructions to observe the practical effects of abolition of the WPA prevailing wage rule and the return to 130 hours of work at security wages. They also will keep a sharp lookout for compliance with the new Hatch politics ban, he said.

Reports of investigators will be scrutinized when the committee returns in the late fall, Taylor added.

With Congress adjourned, nearly a dozen other Congressional investigations prepared for recess activity, with some hearings slated to open in September and October.

Chairman Howard Smith, of the special House committee investigating the National Labor Relations Board and policies, said he had called his five-man group to meet September 7, and hearings will open shortly thereafter.

"I am determined that this shall be a fair and impartial investigation," said Smith. "We shall examine thoroughly into every side of the case."

Healey Called to White House

Smith, a frequent critic of the board's policies, was given a committee comprising two ardent New Dealers, Representative Healey, of Massachusetts, and Murdock, of Utah, and two middle-of-the-road Republicans, Representatives Halleck, of Indiana, and Routzohn, of Ohio.

Healey, New Deal labor bloc member who left the Dies Un-American Committee to take the Smith committee assignment, was called to the White House yesterday. Healey said the President discussed the investigation with him "in a general way," but Healey termed it a "social call."

Smith, the committee chairman, has not yet been invited to the White House.

The House Dies committee investigating un-American activities, with recent emphasis on Nazi-American bund organizations, will resume hearings late this month or early in September.

SEC Praises Overcounter Brokers' Unit

Recognition Given To Association as Step to Aid Public

By the Associated Press

The Securities and Exchange Commission granted recognition yesterday to the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., as a national association of over-the-counter security brokers and dealers. The association has about 1,500 members.

Chairman Jerome N. Frank, of the SEC, said in a letter to Wallace H. Fulton, director of the association, the recognition "marks the beginning of a significant attempt by an important segment of a business affected with a marked public interest in regulating its own affairs in co-operation with the Government . . . In the main the result is indicative of a desire on the part of a large and important part of the business and a group of sincere, representative leaders to tackle with the commission the very difficult job of regulating the vast and unorganized over-the-counter securities markets.

Help to Investors, Dealers

". . . it should benefit both the investor and the honest dealer. It should be an aid in safeguarding our securities markets against those tendencies which destroy the investor confidence so vital to our economy."

The association will be managed by a national board of governors, 14 district committees and a number of business conduct committees, all consisting of members serving as unpaid volunteers.

The SEC said "almost all of the association's rules of fair practice are directed toward eliminating abuses which might well lead to the defrauding of investors" and that one rule "specifically forbids the effecting of transactions in, or the inducement of a purchase or sale of any security by means of any manipulative, deceptive or other fraudulent device or contrivance."

Accountings Not Required

It added, however, there were "no rules whatsoever concerning the solvency of members or requiring any regular or periodic inspections on the part of the association of a member's books or the submission, on the part of the member, of his financial statement to the association or to an independent firm of auditors acting for the association."

The commission expressed regret the association had not adopted such rules and said it "feels that it must emphasize the lack of such rules lest the public be misled into thinking that membership in the applicant association in any way connotes solvency."

With the granting of the application, Henry H. Egly resigned as chief of the SEC's securities association unit to return to private business. In a letter to Frank, he explained he considered his work completed.

Gov. Hoey Refuses To Free Fred Beal

Raleigh, N. C., Aug. 7 (AP).—Gov. Hoey declined today to pardon or parole Fred Erwin Beal, former Communist labor organizer who is serving 17 to 20 years in prison for conspiracy in the slaying of a police chief during the Gastonia textile strike riots of 1929.

Quarter of U. S. Population In Schools

$2,500,000,000 Spent Called 'Most Federal Office Says

One-quarter of the population of the United States is enrolled in full-time day schools that yearly cost the Nation more than $2,500,000,000, according to the United States Office of Education.

About 90 per cent of the pupils are enrolled in publicly controlled schools, Commissioner of Education John W. Studebaker said yesterday.

He pointed out that while 95 per cent of the children of elementary school age are enrolled, only 67 per cent of those at secondary school age may be found in classrooms and only 12 per cent of college age persons are registered at colleges or universities.

Only 50 per cent of the population of the country has gone further than completion of an elementary school education, Studebaker stated. Only 150 out of every 1,000 adults have completed high school education, while of each 150, only 33 also have completed a college course.

The lands, buildings and equipment of the Nation's schools are worth more than $10,000,000,000, he said. Endowments and trust funds total about $2,250,000,000.

Other information volunteered by Studebaker reveals that 91,000 teachers instruct more than 2,500,000 pupils in 13,300 private elementary and high schools in the United States, and that 1,000,000 high school students and 143,000 college students enter the job market each year.

Altmeyer Lauds Security Act Changes

Bills Before President Are Called 'Most Important Legislation'

By the Associated Press

Chairman Arthur J. Altmeyer, of the Social Security Board, yesterday described the Social Security amendments now before President Roosevelt for approval as the "most important piece of legislation in this Congress or any other that I know of."

"We will now have an old-age and survivors' system with over 45,000,000 people," he said. He added that there would be benefits for "survivors not only of the old people, but of young workers who haven't reached the retirement age (of 65)." He referred to payments to widows and dependent children of eligible workers who die or are incapacitated before becoming 65.

Congress completed action Saturday on a long list of revisions which, experts say, will bring about 1,000,000 additional persons under the act and effect taxpayer savings of about $1,000,000,000.

As soon as the President signs the legislation, Altmeyer said, the board would have to augment its field staff. The 332 field offices may be increased, and what he described as "itinerant adjudicators" may have to be added.

"Until now we've had mostly a record-keeping job," Altmeyer said, "but now we'll have the question of adjudicating hundreds of thousands of claims to be filed in 1940."

Under the amendments, pensions to persons over 65 are to start next January 1, instead of January 1, 1942, as originally provided.

Altmeyer said the cost of the old-age assistance program would jump from $46,000,000 to $114,000,000 next year, but increases in later years would be smaller than expected under the original act.

Hotel Union Claims Pay Increases

Salary increases to a number of workers in the Hay-Adams and Annapolis hotels were among gains claimed by the Hotel and Restaurant Employes International Alliance through contracts signed yesterday with the two hotels.

The agreements were concluded after a month of negotiation between James Reed, Claude Martin and James McNamara, for the union, and Harry Weissenger and C. Carroll for the hotels, the union reported.

Other provisions affecting approximately 350 employes, include a modified closed shop, vacations with pay, and an eight-hour day. Details of the agreement will be discussed at a meeting of Local 99 of the union on Thursday.

CIO Foremen's Union Gains in Auto Plants

Has Won Contract Already; Packard NLRB Poll Agreed To

Special Dispatch to The Post

Detroit, Aug. 7.—The Congress of Industrial Organizations is presenting the auto industry with a new set of problems through its new, and so far as is known, unique union of foremen and supervisors.

Already this new union has edged its way into many plants of the major manufacturers, making slow by steady headway. It has had a working agreement with the Kelsey-Hayes Wheel Company, one of the largest independent parts manufacturers, and recently it signed its first contract, with the Universal Cooler Company, which employs 1,000 workers.

The union raises unprecedented legal problems for the National Labor Relations Board. Homer Martin, leader of the American Federation of Labor faction among the organized auto workers, has already gone into court charging the C. I. O. foremen in one plant have been unfair to his followers.

Co-operate With Workmen

The United Foremen and Supervisors was chartered by the C. I. O. last December 8, as Local Industrial Union No. 918, though leaders were reluctant to enlist employes traditionally considered on the management's side.

In return for pledges of full support by production workers, even to the point of striking, the foremen consinted to do their bargaining with the management through shop committees of men who worked under them.

The foremen agreed not to strike unless authorized to do so by a workers' committee, and further, should the workers strike, the foremen were obliged to join them.

Packard Poll Agreed To

Detroit, Aug. 7 (AP).—The ballot superseded the strike today as the instrument for settling labor disputes in the automobile industry.

While idle cogs in the giant General Motors machine began turning again with the end to the C. I. O.'s skilled workers strike, projected auto plant employe elections by the Labor Board commanded the scene.

The A. F. L.-United Auto Workers formally consented to an employe poll in the Packard Motor Car Co., which had been petitioned by the rival C. I. O.-United Auto Workers, and then on its own asked for a similar poll among employes of General Motors plants throughout the country.

C. I. O. Must Assent

The U. A. W.-A. F. L. had earlier indicated opposition to such polls, contending the dispute between the two unions should be settled by Circuit Court litigation, now pending.

Irvan Cary, vice president of the U. A. W.-A. F. L., said the union had also adopted a policy favoring NLRB-ordered polls in the plants of Briggs Manufacturing Co., Chrysler Corporation and the Motor Products Co.

If the U. A. W.-C. I. O. agrees to a General Motors election, the poll can be ordered in the near future. If not, the board must hold a hearing.

Girl, 5, Loses Suit Against Bakery For Tainted Eclair

Because her mother, and not she, bought a chocolate eclair that she said made her sick, 5-year-old Greta Lou Hanback lost a damage suit against the bakery yesterday.

The Court of Appeals dismissed an action filed for the child by her father, Bryant Hanback, of 3829 Calvert street northwest. It was against the Dutch Boy Baker, Inc.

Justice Stephens said a consumer of food other than the purchaser, cannot recover from the seller upon an implied warranty that the food is wholesome. Since Greta Lou's mother gave her the eclair, said the justice, she was only a recipient and her tummy-ache was outside the law of damages.

Cooper Defeated In Bank Claim

J. F. T. O'Connor, former Comptroller of the Currency; F. B. Ewalt, former deputy comptroller, and Robert C. Baldwin, former receiver of the Commercial National Bank, yesterday defeated a $2,000,000 claim filed by Attorney Wade H. Cooper for himself and other depositors and stockholders of the bank.

Cooper claimed bonds belonging to the bank were negligently sold for low prices by the officials. The Court of Appeals held yesterday, as in similar suits previously settled, that the officials were not responsible privately for their official acts. Handling the bond sale, said the court, was part of their duties.

Hatch Law Hit by Young Democrats

Maner Assails Curb As Depriving Federal Workers of Rights

Pittsburgh, Aug. 7.—Pitt Tyson Maner, national president of the Young Democrats, today assailed the Hatch law, which already is making inroads on delegations to the Young Democrats' convention here, as the "most un-American piece of legislation that has been passed by Congress in the last 25 years."

The measure, which outlaws political activity among all but policy-making members of the Federal Government, is expected to provide heated discussion among convention delegates who open their meeting Wednesday.

Meanwhile two complete slates of delegates from California prepared to submit their credentials to a special convention committee. One group, headed by David Gill, represented the "original" group of Young Democrats in California. The other, headed by President James Kehoe, carries the charter issued by national headquarters in Washington.

The "reform" group charged the "original" delegation with a "red" tinge. The "originals" claimed the national officers snubbed them in issuing a charter because Maner and Oliver Quayle, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee and a Young Democrat, were at odds with the leadership of the "original" group.

Maner, of Montgomery, Ala., sidestepped the issue of a third term for President Roosevelt and predicted the split between the New Deal and conservative factions of the Democratic Party will be healed "when we get to fighting the Republicans."

Regarding the Hatch law, Maner said, "Just because a man works for the Government, his hands are to be tied. You get a good man in there and then somebody else will take his place in party leadership and he no longer will be permitted to fight for the principles in which he believes.

"I have not yet found one Young Democrat who is for it," he said.

eH disclosed that all delegates from the District of Columbia who are Federal employes, have been replaced. Other delegates, he said, would contest their replacement.

Justice Bars Activity

By the Associated Press

In an informal opinion, the Justice Department ruled yesterday that Federal jobholders could attend the convention of the National Young Democratic Clubs in Pittsburgh, provided they "did not act as delegates."

The decision referred to provisions of the Hatch law curtailing political activities of Federal employes. It was interpreted as meaning the Government workers could not vote on convention business.

Justice officials advised Pitt Maner

HELP KIDNEYS PASS 3 LBS. A DAY

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

An excess of acids or poisons in your blood, when due to functional kidney disorders, may be the cause of nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

2 Marines Indicted In Norfolk Slaying

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 7 (AP).—A corporation court grand jury today indicted Wallace E. Miller, 18, and Lawrence M. King, 19, U. S. Marines stationed aboard the airtight carrier Ranger, in the hotel-room bludgeon murder of F. T. Jennings, 49-year-old salesman of Augusta, Ga.

August 22 was fixed as the trial date for the two, who were arrested after fingerprints found in the dead room were checked against Marine records in Washington.

Capt. Nerren Wins Rifle Cup For Officers

Sharp-Shooting Reservist Was Also Winner Last Year

Special Dispatch to The Post

Quantico, Va., Aug. 7.—Capt. Charles B. Nerren, Company G, Fifth Battalion, Marine Corps Reserve, "Washington's Own," has been awarded the Military Order of the World War Cup for the highest rifle score for commissioned officers of the battalion, it was announced here today. Capt. Nerren also was last year's winner. Capt. Justice M. Chambers, Company C, was second.

The battalion, here for 15 days field training, has an outstanding marksmanship record. It has twice won both the company and battalion national shooting championships for all reserve units conducted by the Marine Corps Headquarters and the National Rifle Association.

Other marksmanship awards announced today were as follows:

The Brooklyn Woodridge Citizens' Association Cup for the highest company .30-caliber rifle score—Headquarters company, commander, Capt. William J. Burrows; Company G, Capt. Nerren, second, and Company D, Capt. Otho L. Rogers, third.

The Chesterfield Cup to the private with the highest rifle score—Pvt. (first class) William E. Payne, Company C; Pvt. Lee W. Langham, Company E, second.

The Dwight L. Harris Cup to the noncommissioned officer with the highest rifle score—Corpl. Willard R. Piggot, Headquarters Company; Corpl. Henry F. Stille, Company A, second.

U. S., N. Y. Join In Wide Hunt For Buchalter

Special Grand Jury Convenes to Wage War on Racketeers

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 7.—Federal and city authorities took three long strides today in the campaign of the public versus Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, fugitive industrial racketeer accused of conducting a stealthy and deadly war against his erstwhile gangster associates.

The Federal Government convened an extraordinary grand jury to collect and integrate information in a national attack on crime, in which Lepke's capture figured as one specific objective.

Zennreich Hunted

The police sent out an eight-State alarm for Isidore Zennreich, accused Lepke associate, coincident with District Attorney Dewey's disclosure that "Izzy" and four others had been indicted with Lepke and his former top partner, Jacob (Gurrah) Shapiro, as bakery racketeers.

With deliberate fanfare, to impress upon the public consciousness New York's urgent desire for the capture of Lepke, the city board of estimate posted a $25,000 dead-or-alive reward for the saturnine gangster.

Jury Carefully Chosen

The board also offered a $5,000 reward for the killers of Isadore Penn, a quiet Bronx householder whose recent assassination spurred the search for Lepke. Penn, authorities say, was cut down by gunners in the mistaken notion he was a Dewey witness of similar appearance.

The new Federal grand jury, which the Government will use as a national anti-crime clearing house, was selected with extraordinary secrecy, no outsiders being permitted when the court met. Its personnel was likewise unusual, the lost of its membership being studded with men of far more than average business and professional experience, including a half-dozen highly paid industrial executives.

New Drug Credited As Gangrene Cure

Baltimore, Aug. 7 (AP).—An "amazing" recovery of Robert Osborne, 21, from a gangrene-type infection was credited by physicians tonight to the recently introduced drug sulfapyridine, and described as possibly "pointing the way to a successful attack on this infection," heretofore fatal in all but the rarest of cases. He was suffering from haemolytic staphylococcus aureus.

H Street Daylight Bandit Robs Girl Collector of $300

3 Money Bags Taken From Restaurant Employe in Car

Threatened by an armed robber on a busy downtown street yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Beulah St. Clair, pretty 19-year-old collector for Goodacre Restaurants, Inc., surrendered $300 of the company's money and several dollars of her own.

Mrs. St. Clair had made collections at two restaurants and had stopped in front of a third, at 704 H street northwest, when the holdup occurred. When her chauffeur disappeared inside the restaurant, a man jumped out of a car that had been trailing her and pulled out a revolver.

"I don't want any foolishness," the man said, she reported, snatching three money satchels and Mrs. St. Clair's pocketbook from the seat beside her before jumping back on the running board of his own car.

Mrs. St. Clair, who lives at 1116 H street northwest, told police there were three men in the bandit car, all middle-aged.

Pa. Democratic Chief Charged With Blackmail

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 7 (AP).—A bill of particulars accusing Pennsylvania's Democratic State chairman, David L. Lawrence, of "levying blackmail" to the extent of 5,000 was filed in Dauphin County Court today by District Attorney Carl B. Shelley.

The particulars, given at the request of Lawrence's attorney, expanded the charge of extortion against Lawrence that led to his indictment on campaign charges arising from the bitter Democratic primary campaign a year ago.

Shelley asserted in the bill that Lawrence, secretary of the Commonwealth in the Earle administration, obtained $5,000 from the Pioneer Materials Co. under threat that the company would have "difficulty" collecting money due it from the State. Lawrence has made a blanket denial of the charges.

Bridges Marked As No. 1 Radical, Legionnaire Says

San Francisco, Aug. 7 (AP).—Harry Bridges heard himself referred to today as "the outstanding name" in the files of the American Legion's radical research committee in California.

The statement was made at the C. I. O. labor leader's deportation hearing by Harper Knowles, chairman of the Legion's committee.

Knowles, San Francisco business man and a former investigator of subsersive activities for the Associated Farmers of California, was called by Bridges' defense as an "adverse" witness in an attempt to prove improper inducements were made to Government witnesses.

He denied shippers and other employers—as charged by Bridges—were behind his committee or that he played a part in an alleged conspiracy with immigration officials at Portland and Seattle to bring about the union leader's deportation.

The defense sought to show the case against Bridges was prepared by other than Government officials as part of the alleged conspiracy.

Md. Girl Wife Admits Killing Abusive Mate

Farmer Falls Before Shotgun Blast at Mountain Home

By the Associated Press

Frederick, Md., Aug. 7.—A murder charge was filed late today against Mrs. Leona Draper, 19-year-old farm wife arrested following the shotgun slaying of her 41-year-old husband in their mountain home near the Washington County line.

She will be held for action of the September grand jury.

State Police Corporal W. K. May quoted the youthful prisoner as saying her husband beat her and she shot him, then asked a neighbor to notify police.

Her husband, Dewey Draper, beat her last night and again this morning, May said she told him. When Draper returned to the house this morning after chores, she said she met him on the porch with a shotgun.

A blast from the gun struck Draper near the heart and he fell dead, the woman told May.

May said he was informed the Drapers, parents of a 23-months-old child, had had domestic trouble before and Mrs. Draper at one time left her husband but later returned.

Corporal May said he took the child to Mrs. Draper's mother at nearby Jerusalem.

Veteran's Money Held Immune to Seizure in Bank

Col. Ashby Williams, war veteran, now a lawyer here, won exemption from attachment of a $53.50 bank account yesterday by a Court of Appeals ruling that the immunity granted veterans' compensation stayed with it, even after it was deposited in a bank.

Williams was sued by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., which got a judgment and levied on his bank balance. The company claimed Williams' money lost its immunity when put in the bank.

Not saved from attachment by the decision was 50 cents Williams got from another source.

Roosevelt Off To Hyde Park; Signs 100 Bills

President Holds Open House Before Leaving; Sees Ickes

By the United Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday signed numerous bills, discussed legislation and politics with homeward-bound members of Congress and completed plans for his own departure last night as the Capital gingerly shook off an adjournment "hangover." The President left by special train at 11:07 p. m.

Mr. Roosevelt, before leaving for a five or six day stay at his Hyde Park (N. Y.) home, and a subsequent cruise of about ten days in the North Atlantic, held "open house" for departing Congressmen for the third consecutive day.

In addition to such callers, the President lunched with Secretary of the Interior Ickes, received WPA Commissionr Harrington, Solicitor General Jackson and Budget Director Harold D. Smith.

Gov. Price of Virginia was another caller. He discussed the recent Virginia primary with the President. Price is a leader of the State's New Deal faction, which is engaged in an intraparty struggle with a group headed by Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, a leader of the Congressional economy block.

Witnessing the ceremony were Resident Commissioner Joaquin Elizalde and Vice President Sergio Osmena. The latter said he was "happy to witness the signing of the Philippine bill which means so much to the welfare of the Filipino people and to the success of their efforts to prepare for complete independence.

Also signed were:

A bill permitting physically unfit Federal judges to retire on full pay after 10 years' service.

A series of amendments broadening the act requiring registration of persons who act as agents for foreign principals. Persons engaged only in religious, scholastic, artistic or scientific pursuits also are exempted.

An act to prohibit further issuance and coinage of special coins authorized by Congress prior to March 1, 1939.

Treasury officials complained that this coin legislation "encourages traffic in commemorative coins for private profit, increases the possibilities of counterfeiting and in general detracts from the purpose for which money is used."

A measure which will permit Charles Edison to continue as acting Secretary of the Navy until a permanent successor to the late Secretary Swanson is named.

A measure aimed at "card sharps" and other crooks who operate on American ships at sea.

Court Fight Aims Won—Roosevelt

the final objective of the comprehensive proposals for judicial reorganization which I made to the Congress on February 5, 1937.

"The country is naturally concerned with the attainment of proper objectives, rather than any one of many possible methods proposed for the accomplishments of the end."

Conceding that one of his seven recommendations—that for enlargement of the Supreme Court—had never been enacted into law, Mr. Roosevelt declared that recommendation "has been accomplished through the opinions of the Supreme Court itself."

"It is true that the precise method, which I recommended, was not adopted," he said, "but the objective, as every person in the United States knows today, was achieved. . . . Attacks recently made on the Supreme Court itself by ultra-conservative members of the bar indicate how fully our liberal ideas have already prevailed."

This latter statement was taken to refer to a speech by Hogan at the Bar Association's convention on July 30, when the Washington attorney, then president of the association, declared:

"The recent far-reaching decisions (by the Supreme Court) compel the conclusion that the American people must look to the Legislature rather than the Judiciary for the preservation of liberties."

Limitations Destroyed

Protesting the swing away from the conservatism that had aroused the President to open his fight for judicial reform, Hogan asserted that "What were frankly termed 'important shifts in constitutional doctrines' were in fact the most devastating destruction of constitutional limitations in the existence of the United States."

While he was defeated in Congress on the court reorganization bill itself, the President has seen the Supreme Court hand down a string of victories for New Deal undertakings.

While it had previously thrown out NRA and AAA and dealt numerous other blows to Administration objectives, the court more recently, with four Roosevelt appointees sitting in the places of justices who had retired or died has sustained the 1938 farm act by upholding market control where it had earlier ruled out production control.

It has validated the TVA program and the PWA power program. It also stepped out ahead of Congress in holding State employes subject to Federal income taxation and Federal employes subject to State taxation.

Its swing toward liberalism has coincided largely with the development of the conservative trend in Congress that often has plagued the Administration this year.

Regarding the administrative office, the President said in his 1937 message to Congress:

"I also recommend that the Congress provide machinery for taking care of sudden or long-standing congestions in the lower courts. The Supreme Court should be given power to appoint an administrative assistant who may be called a proctor. He would be charged with the duty of watching the calenders and the business of all thecourts in the Federal system. The Chief Justice thereupon should be authorized to make a temporary assignment of any circuit or district judge hereafter appointed in order that he may serve as long as needed in any circuit or district where the courts are in arrears."

Congress Alters Duties

Duties of the administrative officer in the newly-enacted measure do not coincide exactly with those outlined by the President. The compromise bill enacted by House and Senate provides he shall have charge of fiscal affairs of the Federal court system, taking that authority away from the Department of Justice, and with the aid of a judiciary council in each of the Federal circuits, shall keep a regular check of the courts and their work.

He will be appointed by the Chief Justice and be paid $10,000 a year.

Present at the ceremony of signing the new law yesterday were Attorney General Frank Murphy and Homer S. Cummings, who was Attorney General at the time the court reorganization bill was drafted.

The text of the President's statement follows:

It is worth recording that today, August 7, 1939, deserves special recognition because it marks the final objective of the comprehensive proposal for judicial reorganization which I made to the Congress on February 5, 1937. The country is naturally concerned with the attainment of proper objectives rather than any one of many possible methods proposed for the accomplishment of the end.

1. Two and a half years ago I proposed the extension to the Justices of the Supreme Court of retirement privileges then available to other Federal judges. Such an act was passed March 1, 1937.

Liberal Ideas Prevail

2. I called attention to the unwarranted attitude of the Supreme Court with reference to its exercise of constitutional powers. Measures of social and economic reform were being impeded or defeated by narrow interpretations of the Constitution, and by the assumption on the part of the Supreme Court of legislative powers which properly belonged to the Congress. It is true that the precise method, which I recommended, was not adopted, but the objective, as every person in the United States knows today, was achieved. The results are not even open to dispute. Attacks recently made on the Supreme Court itself by ultra-conservative members of the bar indicate how fully our liberal ideas have already prevailed.

3. I called attention to the congested dockets of the Federal courts, delay in disposing of cases, the need of new blood in the judiciary branch of the Government, and the need of additional judges. Since then 25 additional judges have been provided for by the Congress, and a bill authorizing 5 more awaits my signature. The congested dockets and the delay have been already almost eliminated.

4. I called attention to the need for greater flexibility in the judicial system so that judges could be more readily assigned to areas where the courts were excessively in arrears. Under the act of August 24, 1937, a welcome improvement was made in this feature of our judicial system.

Sees 'Intolerable Situation'

5. I called attention to the intolerable situation when constitutional questions involving Federal statutes were passed on in private litigation, and recommended that no decision, injunction or decree on constitutional grounds should be permitted without previous notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity for the United States to be heard. By the act of August 24, 1937, the Attorney General was given the right to intervene in litigation between private parties involving constitutionality of Federal statutes, and limitations were placed on the issuance of injunctions in similar cases in the lower court.

6. I called attention to the need for direct and immediate appeal to the Supreme Court in cases involving constitutionality of Federal statutes, such cases to take precedence over all other matters pending in that court. This right of direct appeal was established by the act of August 24, 1937, and is now the law of the land.

7. I called attention to the need of the judiciary itself for effective machinery for overseeing its own dockets and expediting its own affairs. This very day I have, with great satisfaction, approved an act which sets up an administrative office for the judiciary.

Thus have been enacted into law six of the actual recommendations made by me more than two years ago—and the seventh recommendation has been accomplished through the opinions of the Supreme Court itself.

Support Grows For Britons' Plan for Peace

Totalitarian Nations Would Be Offered Fair Alternative to War

By the United Press.

London, Aug. 7.—A plan for Europe's anti-aggression bloc to issue a joint declaration setting forth point-by-point a plan for peace appeared tonight to be gaining favor in the ranks of Britain's three leading parties.

Exponents of the idea assert that there is a broad difference between their plan and "appeasement" and that, instead of any attempt to buy off aggressor nations, it would offer the totalitarian countries a fair alternative to war.

It is being suggested that the British-French alliance with Soviet Russia—if concluded—be followed up immediately by a statement of the "peace front's" specific terms for a European settlement.

Professor Is Exponent

Prominent among the exponents of the plan are Sir Arthur Salter, Oxford professor and former head of the League of Nations economic section, and Harold Nicolson, author and former diplomat.

If the proposal fails to gain approval of Fuehrer Hitler and Premier Mussolini, its sponsors say, it would at least serve to appeal direct to the German and Italian people and strengthen the position of those elements inside Germany and Italy who are opposed to war.

Should war break out, it was contended, the proposed definition of the anti-aggression objectives would survive as terms for laying down arms and rebuilding Europe.

Sir Arthur Salter issued this summary of the scheme:

It must be made clear that a broadening and deepening "peace front" will continue.

Settlement on Equality

Any settlement must be based on equality and not such as a victor would impose.

It must be recognized that German economy is complementary to the economy of Central and Southeastern Europe and that German economic superiority and political preeminence rather than domination of those regions is acknowledged.

In case Germany should attack Britain without provocation it is to be presumed that Germany's partners would at least remain neutral.

Germany to be assured of a worthy role in building a wider political system in Europe, respecting the rights of nationalities but limiting undue national sovereignty.

Germany would participate in the rule of colonies on the principle of trusteeship and world responsibility.

Japan Ignores U.S. Fleet Commander

Shanghai (Tuesday), Aug. 8 (INS). The Japanese navy today withheld an answer to a third request by Admiral Thomas C. Hart, new commander in chief of the United States Far Eastern Fleet, for acknowledgment of the admiral's plan to sail up the Yangtze River to Hankow on August 20 or 21.

The Japanese were said to be testing the "toughness" of the new commander, who succeeded Admiral Harry E. Yarnell last month. On several occasions, Admiral Yarnell sailed when and where he pleased, defying Japanese restrictions.

Britain Warms 1,300 Planes For Air 'War'

Island Will Be Under Attack From Skies For 72 Hours

By the United Press.

London, Aug. 7.—More than 1,300 bombing and fighting planes were tuned up tonight for Great Britain's greatest peacetime mobilization of aerial strength beginning tomorrow night and continuing for 72 hours, with half of England under "attack" from the skies.

The maneuvers, involving 60,000 men of the air and ground services, will include a spectacular night formation flight over France by big bombers and a mock air raid on the English "westlands" in which 800 defending planes will attempt to beat off 500 raiding ships.

It will be England's greatest "blackout" test since the World War and will recall to many Britons the night of May 19, 1918, when a fleet of German Gothas swept in over the Kentish cliffs and bombed London with a toll of 49 dead and 177 injured.

4-Hour Blackout

The maneuvers will begin at 10 p. m. Tuesday, reaching their climax with a four-hour "blackout" beginning at midnight in the provinces and a half hour later in the crowded London area.

The 1,300 Royal Air Force planes will cooperate with anti-aircraft and searchlight battalions, rescue workers of the Air Raid Precautions units, fire wardens and special police and first aid and ambulance units.

The night flight to France by the flights of bombers will precede the blackout. The returning bombers will fly as enemies from the "eastlands" and stage a raid on strategic points of the "westlands."

The planes flying to France will include new Wellington bombers such as recently flew nonstop to Marseille and return and Hampdens which made a mass flight to Avignon.

When the raiders arrive, high-powered searchlights will criss-cross the skies, their rays automatically geared to fast firing anti-aircraft guns. The "balloon barrage" will float over London, dangling spider-web cables designed to snare enemy planes.

Streets will be completely darkened with householders warned against showing any lights. Traffic lights will be covered with discs to reduce glare. Motorists have been asked to keep off highways and those who must be out will use only sidelights. Trains will travel with blinds drawn. Public air raid refuges will be marked by screened hurricane lamps.

British Take Graver View Of Ichang Raid

Gunboat Reports One Japanese Bomb Aimed At It by Attackers

By the Associated Press

Shanghai, Aug. 7.—British official circles tonight took an increasingly grave view of two Japanese air raids on British property near Ichang as more detailed reports came from the British gunboat Gannet which passed unscathed through the Sunday attack.

Commander A. F. St. G. Orpen, of the Gannet, sent word the gunboat narrowly escaped destruction from one bomb which, he asserted, seemed to be aimed at the British and landed only 100 yards away.

Two British Yangtze River steamers were destroyed in the raids. Four Chinese were killed and a Canadian, H. J. Denyer, and four Chinese were injured.

Mistake, Say Japanese

"We have no information," said a Japanese army spokesman. "If it happened, it is a regrettable mistake."

All of the damaged property was said by the British to have been marked plainly with British ensigns.

Britons charged the attack on British property, which also damaged the Asiatic Petroleum Co.'s Works, was premeditated.

Britain yesterday lodged a protest with Japan, but no action has been taken in the light of further official reports from Commander Orpen.

Foreign missionaries reported casualties probably would total more than 500 in Ichang as a result of Japanese air raids.

Meanwhile the Japanese army spokesman said announcement would be made "shortly" of the creation of a "unified government of China" to consolidate the provisional governments set up in Peiping and Nanking by the Japanese to govern conquered Chinese territory.

Japanese naval authorities, continuing their drive to blockade the China coast, notified foreign consuls the port of Haimen in Chekiang Province, 250 miles south of Shanghai, would be closed tomorrow.

Finns Open War Games

Regulars Prime For Rapid-Fire Thrust on D. C.

4,000 Men of Nearby Posts to Mass at Belvoir For War Maneuvers

By Barry Sullivan

Nearly 4,000 officers and men at nearby military posts prepared yesterday for a "stream-lined" thrust at the National Capital during maneuvers next week in the steaming red dust of northern Virginia.

Only Brig. Gen. Maxwell Murray, commander of the "black" attacking force, knows where the campaign, scheduled to reach its climax on the historic field of Bull Run, will get its start. When the march up the valley of the sluggish Potomac will begin is another decision he will make after conference with his advisers.

Troops at Fort Myer, Va.; Fort Belvoir, Va.; Fort George G. Meade, Md., and Arlington Cantonment, new home of the Sixteenth Infantry, formerly stationed at Fort Washington, know only that they have orders to be "in the field" from today on.

Tuning Up Equipment

At Fort Myer and Arlington Cantonment, officers and men, despite their bewilderment, went about the business yesterday of tuning up scout cars, trucks and automobiles, mending saddles and grooming and shoeing horses in preparation to move to the rendezvous at Fort Belvoir this morning.

They will pull out at the usual Army hours—famous for encouraging desires "to someday murder the bugler." First contingents will hit the roads at 6 a. m., while others will leave at hourly intervals. All are scheduled to be at Fort Belvoir at noon mess.

There they will be quartered in the semipermanent Reserve Officers Training Corps camp where activities have been underway a week to fit the cantonment for their reception.

Engineers permanently stationed at Fort Belvoir, meanwhile, have been solving problems they will have to handle when the "big show" gets underway. They expect to be assigned the job of strengthening many bridges, so they have been practicing strengthening bridges on the post. Although no roads have been built during preliminary activities, the technique of cutting roads through dense wildernesses in record time has been perfected.

First Army to Take Field

At Fort Meade, Gen. Murray's headquarters, plans for welding all troops into the swiftly striking Black Division and its supporting services, rapidly are being brought to completion.

Headquarters for the First Army, which also will take the field Sunday, have been established at Plattsburg, N. Y. During its maneuvers the First Army will attempt to repel a mythical force driving inland from the coast of New England. Its activities will continue until August 27.

In the advance on Bull Run the principal attacking force of the Black Division is expected to be 70 tanks. Driven by 250-horsepower air-cooled engines, they have five forward speeds, two gunners, a radio operator, who also is a gunner, and a driver. Armament includes 50-caliber and 30-caliber machine guns.

The tanks' ability to tear through creeks and over ravines will be tested on the forced march. Although the crew of four probably will get a terrible shaking, each tank can be disabled only by a direct hit which will pierce its armorplate.

Judge Roberts' Salary Lost as Congress Quits

By the Associated Press

The Senate, which early this year rejected the nomination of Floyd H. Roberts, of Bristol, Va., to be a judge for the western Virginia Federal District Court, adjourned Saturday without approving legislation which would have compensated him for the time he served.

Legislation to pay Roberts $5,166.66 for his services under a recess appointment from August 1, 1938, to February 6, 1939, was introduced by Representative Flannagan (Democrat), of Virginia, who indorsed Roberts for the post. The House passed the measure. It could be considered by the Senate at the next session of Congress.

Don't Get Hurt, Army Decrees at Manassas To Avoid Any Bloodshed on Old Battlefield

For the first time, a mobile high-pressure water purification unit was put into operation yesterday, 2 miles outside Gainesville, Va., by the Engineer School of Fort Belvoir, Va. The mobile apparatus, shown above, draws water from Bull Run, purifying it with a chlorine solution and filtering it at the rate of 110 gallons per minute. Units previously used had a 50-gallon maximum. Portable storage tank in background, part of mobile unit, stores 3,000 gallons of the purified water. It is delivered to tank trucks that circulate through the camp

Unless extraordinary precautions fail in the Third Army Corps maneuvers at Manassas, no blood will flow. Victory will come to one side or the other—writ only in perspiration.

None o fthe 17,000 Regulars and National Guardsmen will be permitted to fix bayonets. They must stay at least 100 yards from opposing lines to prevent injury from wadding or gunpowder burns. When the Army's fleet of 50-mile-an-hour tanks come throwing the dust, those in the front must stand up to prevent being run down. These facts were emphasized yesterday at the War Department here.

"Who won this blamed battle?" the soldiers may find themselves asking.

Only Generals Will Know

Only the generals, who will be something like statisticians, will know. The onlookers won't know. What they will see will have none of the cohesive action of the familiar sham battles fought on the Civil War fields. The individual soldiers will know as little of the outcome—or even why they retreated or advanced when they were told to. Everything will be mystifying to them except the steepness of the hills and the toughness of running fast or falling flat in the stubbles of Farmer Brown's corn field.

It's to be a very technical business, involving long, complex tables full of Army experience on what happens to every conceivable kind of force when it collides with, or meets with premeditation, another force. How far could a line of, say, 1,000 soldiers, go against a line of 1,500, or 1,000, or 2,000? All the combinations of experience enter when the umpires rule that a battalion advancing over Farmer Brown's cornfield has met a force too strong, or too weak, and thereupon rules the battalion into retreat or advance.

No Infantry Charges

Aside from being glad they are not out in the hot sun and eating the dust of the Manassas hillsides, the onlookers may have some disappointment. There will be no grand charges of infantry as in the sham battles at Antietam and elsewhere. Machine guns long ago coughed and rattled out such doings. Now the onlookers will see broken sections of fighting, with the fighters fighting something as the American forefathers fought his feathered friend, the Indian.

The soldiers will be seen ducking and dodging behind any convenient shelter. It's in the method these days. If some troop tried to stand in the open like a stonewall, the tanks or airplanes would send the mortar flying. But, officers said yesterday, the aerial formations and the sweep of tanks will be worth the onlookers' bother.

And men won't fall, grasping their wounds and writing final words in blood to their gals from Manassas this time. Or, if they do, it will be only in sideline exercises to see how the Medical Corps field surgeons can handle the wounds in their reports.

This just isn't an onlookers' show. It concerns facts the Army needs to know in making its everyday and future business a little better.

Troops Battle Again at Bull Run

tried to surmount without success. Next "bombs"—beer cans with a "cap pistol" explosive inside—were strewn before the advancing tanks. When the latter set them off, they were ruled out as disabled.

Col. Oehmann, proud of his men's work, said after the drill that the tank commander had ruefully admitted the efficiency of the local engineer regiment, stating that it was better than that of the regulars at the infantry school in Georgia.

Staff officers regard the test as an important one, for the question of tank advance against prepared obstacles is one much discussed at present. Should hastily thrown-up trenches block the steel-clad monsters, what success will they have against such concrete and metal fortifications of the Maginot and Limes lines, they ponder.

The Engineers also threw up "concertinas"—barriers of rolled wire across roads—and tested out a new compressor which saws down trees and digs trenches faster than squads of men and, incidentally, relieves them of much back-breaking labor.

The 260th Coast Artillery, District antiaircraft regiment, had their guns set up and manned all day to defend the Gainesville Railroad against air attack. During this week, to give the men practice, their supporting aircraft are considered "enemy" and the crew of each gun plots an imaginary barrage at each appearance of a plane calculated to bring them down if they fly too low.

Battery C, under Capt. Perry O. Huff, carried out the only actual firing problem of the day, loosing blank shells from their latest type 3-inch antiaircraft gun against a war plane roaring over the Gainesville Railroad station. The gun—said to be effective against planes flying at 10,000 to 15,000 feet—was not tested to its limit, however, for the craft went over the gun at only 50 feet.

Arriving here to take command of the defending Blue Army, Maj. Gen. James K. (Kelly) Parsnos today praised the efficiency of the National Guard officers and State and local policy in making possible the greatest peacetime troop concentration in the history of this area.

The general, who is in general charge of the maneuvers, in addition to acting as chief umpire and Blue commander, declared the war games to be highly important, in that they will "better prepare the troops to do their job in an emergency."

$2,922,424 Left By Harvey Firestone

Akron, Ohio, Aug. 7 (AP).—The estate of the late Harvey Firestone, Akron rubber manufacturer, was estimated at $2,922,434 in a trust agreement filed in Probate Court today by the Cleveland Trust Co., administrator. A tax deduction of $1,686,089 from the gross estate was claimed, leaving $1,236,345 estimated.

Remington Rand Asks Election for Bargaining Agent

New York, Aug. 7 (INS).—Remington Rand, Inc., acting under new rules of the National Labor Relations Board whereby an employer may ask an election to determine collective bargaining agent, has petitioned the NLRB for a vote between an A. F. of L. affiliated union and the Remington Rand Independent Associations of Employes.

Announcement of filing of the petition, one of the first to be submitted under the revised NLRB procedure, was made today by S. M. Knapp, Remington Rand executive vice president.

Nazis Develop Egg Substitutes

The Commerce Department reported today that Germany had developed egg substitutes from fish and milk in an effort to curtail its egg imports, which amounted to $38,000,000 in 1938.

Germany also is experimenting in cold storage of eggs by use of carbon dioxide gas, the department said. From fish meat a protein substance has been extracted which can be used instead of egg whites in baking, candy, mayonnaise, ice cream and other products. Another egg substitute called milei, already produced commercially, is a dried milk albumen which can be beaten into a firm, snowy foam that looks like beaten egg whites.

Coming And Going

Taken as a whole no business group has been more perturbed than the bankers at the steady encroachment of government on functions in the past regarded as wholly the affair of private enterprise. No group has been louder, not to say more querulous, in its lamentations over the tendency to whittle away managerial freedom.

Consequently it is somewhat ironic that a big San Francisco bank should have advanced the argument, in opposing regulation under the Wagner Labor Relations Act, that national banks are merely agencies of the Federal Government and therefore not private employers within the purview of the act. There seems here an anxiety, more understandable than logical, to have a cake while simultaneously eating it.

In time to come, unless certain present trends are successfully reversed, it very likely will be possible to argue that national banks are indeed nothing more than slavish instrumentalities of an all-powerful Federal financial policy. Perhaps that will be true when and if the current case is carried to the Supreme Court. But at the moment the National Labor Relations Board seems on firm ground in deciding that it has jurisdiction in the case of an employe allegedly dismissed for union activity.

The officers of the San Francisco bank, on the other hand, are certainly justified in taking an appeal. Caught between the upper millstone of increasing governmental regulation and the lower stone of growing pressure from organized labor, they may be pardoned for asking a final ruling as to the mill for which the grist of their being is ultimately designated.

Improper Solicitation

In at least one Government department, it appears, active solicitation is now under way to secure contributions for housing the collection of Rooseveltiana which the President proposes to establish on his Hyde Park estate.

Over the signature of Charles B. Ingram, assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, mimeographed appeals have been distributed by official messengers "to all Washington employes" of the Department of Agriculture. These appeals explain that $350,000 in public contributions is necessary to house the Roosevelt collection properly. A subscription blank is attached and employes of the Department of Agriculture are told by Mr. Ingram that "as a matter of convenience, arrangements have been made to clear contributions to this fund through my office."

The newly enacted Hatch law, directed against "pernicious political activities," is probably not broad enough to prevent this particular form of solicitation. While that is unfortunate it does not conceal the gross impropriety of using public money, public time and public offices in an attempt to shake down Government employes for an essentially private project on the part of the President or anyone else.

As we have said before in these columns, Mr. Roosevelt's interest in preserving intact his correspondence and private papers, his ship models, pictures, photographs and various memorabilia, is wholly worthy. But his desire to keep the material at Hyde Park, where it will be accessible to relatively few, emphasizes the personal character of the undertaking. And the more personal the project the more subject to condemnation any attempt to utilize the machinery of government for its furtherance.

All the public papers of President Roosevelt will, of course, become a part of the National Archives. It is highly probable that this division of the Government would be delighted to receive also, for careful preservation, any part of Mr. Roosevelt's correspondence bearing on problems of state. On the other hand it is wholly appropriate and desirable, if Mr. Roosevelt wishes to keep all this material as a private collection, that he should do so and associate with it all the books and pamphlets, pictures, prints and objets d'art which he desires to preserve.

But it is neither appropriate nor desirable for Administration underlings to solicit Government employes for financial assistance in housing Mr. Roosevelt's private collection. It is neither appropriate nor desirable, though admittedly it may be "convenient," to use Government offices to receive contributions for such an end.

In his shakedown letter Mr. Ingram tells Department of Agriculture employes that "this matter is brought to your attention for consideration." There is a related matter, which ought to be brought to Mr. Ingram's attention, "for consideration." It is the wholly improper and thoroughly inexcusable character of his attempt to mingle private promotion activities with Government business.

Certain clarifying amendments to the Hatch law are promised at the next session of Congress. One of the most urgent is expansion of the act, so as to prevent public servants from acting as private solicitation agents.

Satellite Of The Axis

When Gen. Franco reviewed the victory parade held in Madrid last May he wore the red beret of the Traditionalists, who dream of remaking Spain in the image of the past. But the rest of his uniform was that worn by the Falangists, whose ideology is that of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy.

Franco's dress on that occasion reflected the duality of the movement which he heads and also the inner conflict which, repressed while civil war raged, was certain to come to the surface once victory had been achieved. Since then there has been no love lost between the Traditionalists and the Falangists, their mutual rivalry threatening to multiply the very considerable difficulties of the new regime.

The struggle between these anti-Republican groups has so far been unequal. The Traditionalists provided Franco with some of his best fighters. But the Falangists, who numbered little more than a handful at the outset of the civil war but have since grown numerous, have the support of the axis powers since they favor the closest kind of co-operation with Berlin and Rome. Therefore, unless Franco was prepared to break with Hitler and Mussolini, without whose assistance his revolt would probably have been quickly suppressed, it was practically inevitable that he would have to favor the Falangists.

A fortnight ago Franco deposed several outstanding monarchists, including Gen. Queipo de Llano, military governor of Seville and Gen. Juan Yague, commander of the Moroccan army corps. The other day he went further and, formally assuming the dictatorship of Spain, gave to the Falange control over the country's vital policies and departments.

This action comes as no surprise. Long since an order was issued by the Burgos regime merging the Traditionalists and the Falangists in one party with Franco assuming the title of "El Caudillo," i. e. chief or fuehrer. But this union of rivals was more nominal than actual. Behind the screen of one-party government the rival groups continued to struggle for power.

It remains to be seen whether the present decree, ordering the immediate execution of the previous edict of fusion, will meet with wholehearted acceptance or whether it will merely intensify the obvious difficulties of the Nationalist regime. It is nonetheless significant that the action has been taken at this time.

At the present juncture of affairs in Europe, Spain's position is of vital strategic importance. To assure at least the neutrality of the Franco government, France and Great Britain have gone out of their way in courting the Caudillo. Last month, for instance, France ordered the repatriation of $39,730,000 in Spanish gold stored in French banks by the fallen Republic.

The German and Italian governments, however, have been no less determined that their efforts in Franco's behalf would not go unrewarded. It now appears that they have won out. In according the Falange party dominance over Spain's foreign policy Franco has accepted the Falangist program of close and intimate relations with the axis powers, whose political systems and whose ideology Spain is now also to share.

So-o Big!

Mayor LaGuardia has not seriously injured his prestige among the New York City masses by his exhortation to the heads of municipal departments and of private businesses to give their employes Saturdays off in order to permit them to see the World's Fair. Even those who may be so unregenerate as to prefer to spend the Saturday holiday at Coney Island or the Yankee Stadium or the Bronx Zoo are likely to have a grateful thought for the Mayor.

However, Mr. LaGuardia's request seems due to something more than solicitude for his own popularity or even for the cultural well-being of his townsmen. The truth is that attendance at the World of Tomorrow has thus far been a sore disappointment to its sponsors. It is true that in the three months since the fair opened the attendance figures have been larger than for any other fair over any comparable period. But with the summer more than half over the attendance figure of 60,000,000 so cheerfully forecast by the experts in nowhere in sight.

Considering that there is no admission charge to most of the more interesting exhibits at the fair, the standard admission price of 75 cents may not seem unduly high. Persons blessed with reasonably sound wind and metatarsal arches, who have no particular yearning to drop in parachutes or gaze at embalmed female anatomies, may see a great many marvels without spending more than the cost of subway fare and the general admission ticket. For those who can afford to come to New York from distant parts of the country the admission charge is an insignificant factor in the general total.

With New Yorkers it is different. It is pretty well known that many of them are poor people who have to think twice before spending 75 cents on anything besides the barest creature comforts. Moreover, it is impossible for any one person to see more than a portion of all that is worth seeing at the fair in any one day. Two, three, four trips are required to make anything more than a superficial coverage of these 1,216 acres on which $155,000,000 worth of signs and wonders have been assembled. Seventy-five-cent tickets and five-cent subway fares multiplied three or four times make a considerable total. Multiplied again by the membership of an average family it can become prohibitive.

How attendance will be affected by the new reduced rates remains to be seen. Last week-end the figures, to the great joy of Mr. Whalen, took a lusty jump. But it begins to appear that the World of Tomorrow, like so many other things in the world of today, is too big for its own good.

Britain's Reward

From the available evidence there seems good reason to believe that the Japanese air raid which destroyed two British Yangtze River steamers at Ichang was a deliberate and premeditated act.

The two ships were moored at a spot which was known as an anchorage for foreign vessels. There was no secret as to their identity. Nor was there any military objective anywhere in the vicinity to give the Japanese the excuse that the bombings were merely a matter of bad marksmanship. Indeed, except for a few desultory bombs dropped on nearby Ichang, apparently for form's sake, that town was left alone. The Japanese army aviators concentrated their attack on the British vessels in the river and on a British oil company's establishment nearby.

To obtain insurance against this sort of molestation, Great Britain recently paid a great price. On July 24 the London government formally recognized the "special requirements" of the Japanese forces in China and agreed to instruct British authorities and British nationals to do nothing to interfere with the carrying out of these "special requirements" by the Japanese. The reward has been an intensification rather than a relaxation of the anti-British campaign.

The military authorities in Japan have never taken very kindly to the negotiations undertaken by the Tokyo government with Great Britain for the settlement of the Tientsin dispute. Apparently they have no desire to see these negotiations succeed. And what little chance of success there is will soon disappear if British rights continue to be flouted.

Once again the Japanese army is taking the bit in its teeth, revealing contempt of and indifference to British warnings, such as that voiced by Premier Chamberlain recently when he declared that Great Britain might find it necessary to send a fleet to the Far East.

A Successful Operation

From "DOCTOR, HERE'S YOUR HAT!" by Dr. Joseph A. Jorger. Published by Prentice-Hall, Inc.

Old Doc taught me early what a disturbing factor fear may be and how a mind full of fear is capable of building symptoms that baffle understanding. And Old Doc never failed to evaluate seriously the sufferings of this type of patient.

The first of such cases I saw was that of a middle-aged farmer's wife who came into the office one day. She could not sleep. She could do no chores. She got no rest because of a ringing in one ear and erratic pains over the right side of her head. She complained of dizziness and nausea. On examination I found no traces of disease. Then Old Doc took her over. "Now, you sit right here and tell me just what it is you want to get rid of." "That ringing in my ears. That awful all-over sick feeling, and the pains in my head." After a few irrelevant questions, Old Doc said, "Now tell me what the ringing in your ears feels like." "Well, it sounds like two rolls of a mill slowly grinding in there. Sounds as if they are grinding something gritty. Like cereal."

"Then the pain and dizziness come from the constant grinding of what you believe to be cereal?" asked Old Doc. "Yes," she said defiantly, "that's how it appears to me."

"Take this medicine," said Doc, handing her a few harmless pills with elaborate instructions. "Come back to me in two days and I will be able to cure you."

Before the woman returned, Doc carefully arranged the treatment room. The table was squarely in the middle; around it on smaller tables he spread the entire contents of the instrument cases till the place looked more like an arsenal than a doctor's office. The poor woman arrived, looked, and trembled. She was invited to disrobe and mount the table. Her face was covered with an ether mask, and then Old Doc went to work.

He pulled from a remote cabinet a large veterinary syringe and a package of cereal. He filled a basin with water, then poured a handful of cereal. All this time he kept up a running stream of conversation about what he was going to extract from her brain. The squirt gun was brought into action. The woman rebelled against the repeated squirts of water into her ear. Finally Doc gave a yell of relief and triumph. The operation was successful. The mill had run out of material as he extracted the last of the cereal. The woman sat up and gazed at the basin full of cereal. "Oh, Doctor, Heaven be praised! The ringing and pains have stopped!"

The patient, with renewed hope, paid the fee of $1 and went off happy.

Letters To The Editor

"Hyphenated Democrats"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Hyphenated Democrats" combined with Republicans to destroy progressive principles in a spirit of disloyalty to their party have been known before.

In 1910, when Democrats were trying to overthrow the rule of Joe Cannon in the House of Representatives, 23 Democrats under the leadership of Congressman Fitzgerald, voted with stand-pat Republicans in opposition to their party principles.

So, today, Democrats can combine with Republicans to defeat the President; but, can they combine with Republicans to re-elect themselves? DAVID WHITNEY.

The Alien Bills, Pro And Con

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With due respect for another's opinion and his right to express that opinion, I would like to comment upon the views expressed by two writers whose letters were published in The Post of August 3 concerning the recent alien bills.

The letter signed by "A Citizen" asks concerning the bill (H. R. 5138) introduced by Representative Howard Smith of Virginia: "First of all, who are aliens?" then he continues: "What may be an alien to one person is a citizen to another." I am at a loss to understand the full meaning here. Is he referring to what constitutes an 'alien' under the bill, or is it an independent statement? If it is the latter, than I think it will be well to note Section 1 of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution in which 'citizen' is defined. I doubt that it is a matter of personal opinion. Those not within this definition should then be aliens.

The last paragraph of this letter appears to be a contradiction in terms. The writer said that the patriots who fought for this country 150 years ago will have died in vain should this bill pass the Senate. Is it not true that those very patriots fought and died in order that they could be free from interference from other countries? Is it not true that this bill is designed to prevent similar interference? Is it necessary that we ultimately resort to offering the youth of this country on the sacrificial altar of war in order to justify our birthright?

In the letter written by Elizabeth Lyle it was stated that the only way to check on aliens, if they were required to register would be to stop every citizen at various times for proof of the citizenship status. It hardly seems possible that an efficient system could not be devised whereby aliens could be registered without interfering with citizens of this country. On the contrary, I believe that a satisfactory method can be established because a registered alien is not a citizen.

It is true, however, that one of the alien bills, namely the Hobbs bill (H. R. 5643) contains a flaw in that the "good cause" phrase is vague. What constitutes a good cause would be dependent upon the interpretation given by various administrative officials. Despite this, however, this bill is applicable only to the detention of certain aliens and it is limited to deportable aliens as are criminals, narcotic smugglers, etc. In the final analysis, nine well-known men might decide the issue.

ELLSWORTH T. SIMPSON.
Arlington, Va., Aug. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Unknown and confusing to the great majority of the American people there were at present some sixty or seventy—a staggering number—of antialien, antidemocratic bills before the recent Congress. These measures, if passed, would have destroyed the civil liberties of the people of this Nation.

A list of forty-some odd proposed bills of this type was published at the National Emergency Conference, held in this city quite recently, for the purpose of concentrating authoritative opinion and of spreading reports of the various repressive alien legislation before Congress.

The conference was attended by such brilliant champions of human dignity as Mgr. John A. Ryan, Vihjalmur Stafansson, Dr. Henry S. Leiper, foreign secretary for the Federal Council of Churches; John Brophy, national director of the C. I. O.; Senator James E. Murray, of Montana; Dr. Harold Urey, winner of the Nobel prize in chemistry, and Deputy Commissioner Edward J. Shaughnessy, of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service. All of these men agreed that from every viewpoint these measures are dangerous wedges for fascism.

Of course, one can see the gradual encroachment of our civil rights which these pending measures hold. They are thoroughly unjustified, as a few pertinent facts released by the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service suffice to show.

There are only 3,500,000 aliens in the United States today. The number of noncitizens has decreased 50 per cent since 1930. There is a loss of 225,000 aliens yearly. In 1938 68,000 were admitted—284,000 were removed by citizenship, departure, or death. Therefore, the ratio of decrease over increase is 4 to 1. Only one-third of 1 per cent of 1,000,000 seamen who came here in 1938 jumped their ships. Only 4,000 visitors overstayed their leave. The number of competitors for jobs, if all immigration would cease, would have the trivial reduction of one-half of 1 percent.

Organized labor has always opposed cheap foreign labor. And it has always fought for immigration restrictions. Yet today, though it has the largest unemployment record in the history of the Nation, labor is opposing alien deportation or further immigration restrictions. Why? Progressive organized labor has gone on record against such actions for they represent reactionary interests carried against the entire social and labor legislation of the past seven years. So the excuse of the legislators that aliens are keeping Americans unemployed is shown to be unfounded. Labor would have been the first to acknowledge alien restriction if that were the truth.

One of the most apparent reasons for the suggestions of halting all immigration is the attempt to defeat the Wagner refugee bill. Senator Wagner's proposal for the admission of 20,000 refugee children, Protestant, Jewish, and Catholic, which has the wholehearted support of every intelligent and decent-minded person on the national scene.

In the establishment of any sort of regimentation here citizens can clearly see the first sign of fascism. They are selecting a group of people to be ostracized. First, it will be the native born against the foreign born. Then it will be turned against the Negro — the Jew — the Catholic. Finally it will be nihilism—mass regimentation—complete fascism.

It's now or never for a Democratic America!

STANLEY C. GARTENHAUS.
Washington, Aug. 6.

Coin For Sales Tax

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is now practically conceded by all thinking men that a national old-age pension is the solution to the unemployment and business stagnation problem. But the great sticker is the method of financing the scheme. I think a national sales tax of 2 per cent on all sales for use and not for resale is the answer.

I propose that the Government coin a new coin called the "mill." We already have the mill in our system of money. Ten mills make 1 cent. Then tax all sales of 3c to 5c one mill; all sales 5c to 10c two mills; 10c to 20c, four mills; 20c to 30c, six mills; 30c to 50c 10 mills, or 1 cent, and every 50-cent sale or multiple thereof; after that tax it 2c or 1c, or 10 mills.

Purchasers can then buy the mills from the Government and pay their tax as they make the purchases. All purchases that paid a tax of 1c and over can be paid with the present type of coin. This would give the Nation a greater purchasing power and it would also do away with tokens in other States, because it would be only a short while before the States would use the mills to pay their different sales taxes. And this extra money would be a circulating medium which we badly need.

In addition to the retail sales tax place a 2 per cent tax on wholesales; 2 per cent on manufactured articles, and 2 per cent on all wages and salaries and incomes and then take off the social security wage tax. In this way we can grant all over age 60 a $60 per month pension, both man and wife, on the condition that they both cease all gainful pursuit.

ELBERT EASTMAN.
Portland, Oreg., July 22.

Unicameral Legislature

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A great deal has been said about duplication in Governmental agencies. One of the most outstanding examples is the Senate taking up a bill which has passed the House. Since the House is elected by the voters, it is totally unnecessary to have a Senate pass upon a bill already approved. The consistent thing to do is to abolish the Senate. Or, keep the Senate and abolish the House.

Whenever 51 per cent of the elected membership of the House approve a bill it should be law, without necessity of going through the Senate. Neither should a bill approved by 51 per cent of the House be subject to veto. This makes a one-man government.

An instance in point is where the Senate recently behind closed doors destroyed the improved retirement bill passed by the House. An ideal retirement law, and one that is coming, is a 10 per cent contribution by employes, none by the Government and compulsory retirement after 30 years' service, or at age 64, with retirement pay three-fourths of salary. A something for something law.

Let the Senate be abolished, the members of the House paid a modern compensation in the neighborhood of $50,000 a year each, and we will then get a modern government. Abolish the veto and pay the President $1,000,000 salary a year. H. H. W.
Annandale, Va., August 4.

Mr. Bondy's Salary

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a recent issue you state that the newly appointed director of public welfare, who receives only $8,000, anticipates a salary of $8,500 under the next appropriations act.

Why shouldn't the Board of Public Welfare take this additional $500 from the Social Security fund for the aged, blind and dependent?

Perhaps the new director is too high minded to accept the bread out of the mouths of the helpless! I hope so.

The Post Impressionist

On Being 29

YOU GET so you like to talk about how long it has been since you had a new suit, but you don't really mind half as much as missing your coffee in the morning. You wish you could be by yourself and think once in a while, but when your wife goes away you don't do a thing but sit up and read the Saturday Evening Post until you go to sleep with the climax of a story in sight. Then you call her up and can't think of anything to say.

You rent a house with an acre of ground around it so you can get out in the sun, and then you never can find time to do anything outdoors. You acquire a seed catalogue and can taste every vegetable in it. You get out your tennis shoes and look at them, and in the process you disturb an old football jersey with moth-webs clinging to it and wonder why you don't throw it away. But you don't.

You have had a lot of friends, but they all seem to be somewhere else, and you talk to them about getting together, but seldom do. After a while you begin to wonder if they really are friends, and now that you think about it you haven't a thing in common with them. The married ones have their own affairs to attend to, and the unmarried ones are embarrassed to bring their men or their girls around old married people.

You make an effort, surprise your spouse and suggest inviting Mary and old Bill to the house for dinner. She makes an effort, too, the silver and the Ambassador Ware are extracted from the attic, the extra leaf is put in the table. You call Bill and it's wonderful, they can come out that night.

Dinner is late and it's the best you've ever eaten and the best old Bill has ever eaten either. It really is. You eat more steak than you ever thought possible, and afterward you and old Bill sit up and go to sleep while the girls get terribly interested in something, you never find out what. After a while it's time to go home and Bill has had the best time in years and so have you and both of you are regarding the vision of a bed as a failing swimmer regards a boat.

Of an afternoon you switch on the radio while you tie your shoes before going out to sit in the yard, and the baseball game is on and you stay listening to it until time to go to the office for the night's work. You think about the approach of football season and feel bad because you know you'll be asking for free passes, although you haven't paid your alumni dues or contributed to the athletic fund. But then you remember about the last time you went back to the university and about the people who invited you to come around for a drink after the game and then didn't recognize you when you got there.

You know by this time that you will never write a novel or play or learn to draw or perform on the piano; that you will never be the whiz in business you once knew you could be or the banquet speaker you pictured yourself. The snap has gone out of your mind just as the old feeling of unflagging power has gone from your legs and shoulders. The only vanity which remains, since you probably don't get around to giving it the test, is a delusion that you have an infallible charm for the other sex.

Your old ambitions haunt you and at times you feel very sorry for yourself, but outwardly you present a picture of thickening comfort. Your daily failures and disappointments do not embarrass you half as much as the memory of silly things you did and defeats you suffered and chances you muffed and naive conceptions you formed when you were younger. Your old girls, most of whom you would not know by sight, enter largely into this nostalgic picture. You spend a great deal of time wondering how you ever could have been such an unmitigated fool and if it's possible that you still might be. No, it isn't possible—and perhaps that, too, is something to be regretted.

You are glad that you have a son and you hope he will be great because it is time somebody in the family was being great again and you know you never will be. You are not, of course, going to make the mistake your father made when he decided you were to be all the things he wanted to be and couldn't. But that is exactly what you are doing already. Well, life goes on, you think, from generation to generation. And somewhere it crops up into something more than just life. Sooner or later . . .

In another year you'll be 30.

TURNER ROSE.

In Other Words

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Westbrook Pegler's story of George Spelvin and the maid Hattie in a recent edition of The Post was a bit long-winded. What Mr. Pegler might have said was:

In their treatment of their maid, Hattie, the Spelvin family sowed the wind and reaped the whirlwind. Organized labor ought to be careful not to sow too much wind. There is a law of diminishing returns and it works both ways.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Shedding Tears

I HEARD the other night on the air, in a discussion of various topics, a young orator whom we will call Elliott Roosevelt deploring the heartlessness of those who had opposed the housing bill on politico-economic grounds. In the course of this address in which, toward the end, the profit motive was revealed with elephantine subtlety, our orator grew almost tearful about a blue-eyed, elfin child who lacked the material comforts of a good home. She lived in the slums.

We received the benefit of his wisdom and highmindedness on the subject of slums and their effect on the young, and as he talked I just wished that he had found time to discuss the importance of patience, morality and integrity in the home and the effect on children of the abandonment of one parent by the other and, later, complete divorce. It seemed to me that this young statesman valued plumbing, certified milk, clothing, play-space and other material comforts far above, indeed to the total exclusion, of all the other factors that contribute to the moral and spiritual well-being of a child.

Perhaps it were tactless of me to mention the matter and it may have been only for reasons of good taste that he himself refrained from speaking of divorce as a possible affliction to children who find themselves caught in a middle of he-and-she fights in the family circle. The divorce rate in this country has now risen to about one in six marriages and someone's best friends, and I suppose most important advisers, are divorced, so we may here have created another taboo.

However, along with those graphs and time-table statistics which show the proportion of former newsboys in American prisons there are some which indicate the proportions of prisoners who came from broken and disrupted homes and whose waywardness is attributed to this condition.

Divorce Is Luxury For Those Of Slums

THIS PROPORTION is very high. Divorce is a luxury which is sparingly patronized by the poor people of the slums, so one may take it that the broken-home criminals in prison did not come from such neighborhoods but from homes in which squalor was spiritual not material and, in some cases, undoubtedly chargeable to the selfishness or worse fault of one or more parents. Squalor is not only physical.

It exists in luxurious homes in the high suburbs and cases of waywardness have occurred in which young offenders received lenience or sympathy on the ground that the moral surroundings of well provided homes were bad.

Now, no sensible person would undertake to argue that poverty, hunger and dirt are good for growing children, although Abe Lincoln is one among many who could be cited as exceptions to the general theme that such childhood conditions must produce waste citizens. Ever so many eminent Americans of the generation which is now distinctly old came from homes in neighborhoods which were undoubtedly slums.

They, too, were the children of immigrants and were raised in poverty but, given deceny and a certain type of gameness in the parents, the children grew to maturity with character and took their place in society on equality, at least, with others who were raised in riches.

Elliott Charges Political Motives

OF COURSE, gameness in the parents, gameness of character, is important because without it, in slum or mansion, one or the other may tire easily of little faults and annoyances, and, out of selfishness, deprive the children of their moral due. Most divorces are granted on grounds so petty that it is obvious that someone, not necessarily the plaintiff, has been guilty of a serious breach of good citizenship if it be granted that the marriage relations, the home and the family are important factors in the life of a civilized state.

Young Mr. Roosevelt, with a graceful flight of oratory, avoided examination of the reasons why those who voted against the housing bill voted as they did. He seemed to impute to them only heartlessness and political motives and proposed, just rhetorically, of course, that those statesmen, for the good of their souls and the souls of the slum children, be compelled to live for some time under practical conditions in the slums which they had refused to eradicate. There might be something to that.

I further suggest that if Congress were to examine the divorce traffic, the flippancy with which some parents far removed from the slums shirk off their moral obligations to their children, they might arouse a serious popular demand for a national law which would make it impossible for a young man with no excuse of poverty or ignorance to abandon a wife with a new-born child and leave the young one fatherless.

Spain to Buy U. S. Surplus Cotton

Export-Import Bank To Finance Sale of 250,000 Bales

Special Dispatch to The Post

The Export-Import Bank arranged yesterday to finance the sale of 250,000 bales of raw cotton to Spanish mills at the rate of 25,000 bales a month. The bank will provide 80 per cent of the credit, which probably will total around $10,000,000, and individual shippers will finance the balance.

The deal with Spain had been pending for some time, but Secretary Morgenthau opposed it pending settlement of title to $15,000,000 worth of silver from Spain.

The United States Government purchased 35,000 ounces of silver from the loyalist government in 1938, and the Bank of Spain filed suits to recover it on the ground that it belonged to the bank and the loyalists had no right to sell it. On July 14, Federal Judge Vincent L. Leibell, in New York, dismissed the action.

Repayable in Installments

Before this decision, Morgenthau feared that if the cotton were shipped the Franco government might seek to compel the United States to accept the silver as payment.

The Export-Import Bank announced today it had assurances from Spain that dollar exchange would be made available to meet all maturities in connection with the cotton deal.

Obligations incurred in the transaction will be repayable in eight quarterly installments beginning six months after delivery of the cotton. Commercial banks in this country will be authorized as agents. The cotton is to be shipped in American vessels.

Sale to France at Discount

The Commodity Credit Corporation holds some 11,000,000 bales of cotton as a result of $500,000,000 worth of crop loans and the Spanish sale is the fourth step taken recently to dispose of some of the surplus.

Congress authorized the payment of export subsidies of 1½ cents a pound to promote exportations.

A cash sale of 135,000 bales to France and Switzerland was arranged at a discount of $8 a bale below the world price, representing the cost of one and one-half years' storage.

Find Increase Lost

In order to prevent a glut on the spot markets, the latter two arrangements provided that the cotton must be stored for use in war on similar emergency.

Warren Lee Pierson, president of the Export-Import Bank, was in New York today to perfect arrangements for the Spanish shipments. The credit was understood to have brought the total of the bank's commitments to $89,000,000 of its $100,000,000 revolving fund.

A provision to double this fund was included in the Administration's lending bill which failed of passage at the session of Congress just closed. Senator Taft (Republican), Ohio, proposed an amendment to cut the increase to $25,000,000 but the Senate accepted a compromise by Senator Barkley (Democrat) Kentucky, the majority leader, providing for $75,000,000. The House, however, refused to consider the bill.

D. C. Negligence Blamed for High Tuberculosis Toll

The negligence of the District government is responsible for the extremely high tuberculosis death rate in Washington, Dr. A. Barklie Coulter, director of the Bureau for Tuberculosis, charged yesterday.

Speaking to an audience of 100 WPA workers at the Housekeeping Aid Project headquarters, 61 I street northwest, Dr. Coulter pointed out that the death toll of the "white plague" was more than six times as high as the automobile death rate in 1938. The District, he said, is far behind most cities in this respect.

Backing up the argument of the District health officer for establishment of health centers throughout the city, Dr. Coulter explained that "it has been found necessary to bring the clinic facilities to the patients rather than the patients to the clinic. Public health is purchasable," Dr. Coulter insisted, where tuberculosis is concerned. He claimed that adequate appropriations would cut the T. B. rate here tremendously.

Navy Orders Admiral Byrd To Active Duty

Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, who expects to sail in October for Antarctica where he will stake out United States claims to territory, yesterday was ordered to active duty by the Navy Department.

Although the orders set no date for Admiral Byrd to begin his service, it was understood he would have active status during the expedition to the southernmost continent.

Congress recently appropriated $360,000 for the undertaking.

Life's Darkest Moment

Books and Things

By Lewis Gannett

IT IS, Vilhjalmur Stefansson says, introducing his book, "Iceland, the First American Republic" (Doubleday, $3.50), "high time that the United States and Canada discover the nation that discovered the mainland of North America."

Not that the discovery of the American continent seemed very important to the oldtime Icelanders. Mr. Stefansson admires Leif Ericson, but not above his fellows; in the minds of the Icelanders, he says, Eric the Red's settlements in Greenland, Leif's voyages to Labrador, and Thorfinn Karlsefni's attempted settlement on the continent in "Vinland" were no more significant than dozens of other high adventures—voyages through the Baltic and to Russia, foraging raids down the coasts of Spain and into the Mediterranean. And even in those days the Icelanders were such men of letters that they may have ranked higher those of their countrymen who served the courts of Europe as poets laureate than such mere seamen as Leif Ericson.

Good poets they were, too. Mr. Stefansson, who believes in this land of his ancestors, recalls that William Morris held that the Icelandic sagas should be to the British what the tale of Troy was to the Greeks. Without the Icelanders Wagner would never have had the stuff for his Nibelungenlied operas. Good Nazis have urged the Germans to substitute the Eddas for the Bible and make pilgrimages to Iceland, "the Holy Land of our religion;" and President Theodore Roosevelt used to hold his children enthralled by reading to them from Snorri Sturluson's "Heimskringla." The present Theodore Roosevelt, indeed, writes an enthusiastic introduction to Stefansson's book.

I LIKE Mr. Stefansson best when he is engaged in conscientiously proving that what most people believe is wrong. When he devotes himself to cataloging the exports and imports of Iceland, the numbers and pay of its doctors, and the meritorious achievements of its people, he is, it must be admitted, a bit on the dull side. But then, he admits having had the aid of a commissioner to the World's Fair, and that may have been depressing. When he escapes the Flushing Tomorrow, and writes of the Icelandic past, however, real eloquence stirs his pen.

For Iceland's story is amazing and neglected. One of Explorer Stefansson's hobbies, as most newspaper readers know, is the virtue of meat. Icelanders, he points out, for centuries ate almost no vegetables at all, but they have always had better teeth than any of the lettuce-munching nations. In another chapter, however, Stefansson records a recent rise in the Icelandic potato harvests; let us hope it does not ruin Iceland's teeth.

Another of Stefansson's passions is the comfort of life in the North. All Iceland, to be sure, lies well to the north of Greenland's Cape Farewell and of the tourist-visited Alaskan ports. But even in January, the indefatigable Stefansson insists, Reykjavik has a climate like that of Milan or Philadelphia. New York has experienced subzero temperatures 7 degrees lower than Reykjavik's coldest; yet in summer the Iceland city never knows an 80-degree day. It seems to be the Honolulu of the Arctic. In summer, too, Mr. Stefansson adds, you can read a book outdoors in Iceland at any hour of the day or night, which would be a boon to book reviewers. How dark it is in winter he does not say.

Iceland's forests are not immense, but she does not need to burn wood. The land is full of hot springs; indeed, we owe our word "geyser" to the Icelandic language. It means "gusher," and the geysers gush all about the island's capital. One section of the city is already heated by means of this natural hot-water supply; and latterly the vegetarians of the island—despite Mr. Stefansson's best efforts, some Icelanders demanded greens—have taken to heating immense hothouses from the hot springs, and so growing excellent flowers and vegetables even in that northern clime.

To this remarkable people we owe not only the discovery of our continent and much of our conception of democracy, but even our system. The Icelanders, indeed, experimented with the republican system long before our founding fathers began their constitutional experimentation. By 1261, Mr. Stefansson points out, Iceland had been a republic for 331 years, "which is 181 years longer than the United States has yet been a republic." Greenland copied the republican pattern from Iceland; according to the Stefanssonian count, the United States of America is ony the third American republic, and Haiti the fourth. (Those whose knowledge of geography is faulty will do well to read Stefansson's own explanation of Iceland as a part of America. You can see Greenland from the Iceland hills; you can't see Europe. And as to cultural backgrounds, Iceland is assuredly no more European than these United States).

Nor will Stefansson permit the Latin claim that while Icelanders may have discovered the American mainland, they also forgot it. The Icelanders kept constant contact with Labrador at least as late as 1347, and probably much later; papal documents make clear that Greenland falcons were shipped to Italy as late as 1396; and Columbus himself, before he sailed west across the Atlantic, had voyaged north to Iceland and beyond. Southrons used to think Columbus a liar because he reported the sea free of ice for 300 miles north of this misnamed island; but Columbus, says Stefansson, was right; and Columbus must have heard in the North of the Icelandic voyages.

THE ONE point at which Mr. Stefansson fails in his enthusiasm for Leif Ericson is in accrediting Leif's priority. Leif found his "Vinland" in the year 1000; and Mr. Stefansson suspects that unsung Scandinavians, and perhaps also Basques and Irishmen (the Irish were the first settlers in Iceland) may have preceded him.

On the moot question of the location of "Wineland the Good," Mr. Stefansson touches a note which will distress some of the patriots who claim proofs that Wineland was on Martha's Vineyard or Cape Cod. The Icelandic word, he says, is "vinder," which means "wineberries," and any berries from which wine can be made are to this day called wineberries in Norway. So the Icelandic explorers may have been referring to crowberries or cranberries, not, as has been assumed, to grapes; and in that case, one of the major buttresses of the argument that they sailed south to within the present territory of the United States falls dismally.

There is one point in Stefansson's book, however, which is puzzling. Between 1870 and 1900, he says, a third of the island's population migrated to Canada and the United States. If that is true, can Iceland, after all, be Paradise?

THE PRESIDENT has tried many things. That they did not work is shown by many conditions—crop prices lower than any year since 1933, unemployment almost as great as in 1933, with public debt at a new high and still increasing. And the President was at the end of his "something elses." His final something else, the lending bill, was not a something else at all. It was the same old device with a new name—what Mr. Roosevelt now called "Government lending" was the same thing he had formerly called "Government spending."

This Congress realized. More than anything else, Congress was saying to the President: "We've tried your devices and they have failed and we're through with them." If Congress were told by Mr. Roosevelt that as a result of their action, depression would continue, and that something must be done—if Congress had been told that, Congress would have replied: "All right, maybe we'll have to try something else, but if so, it won't be your something else; if the sickness continues, we'll get a new doctor."

If the threat becomes actuality, if there is not business improvement, what are the possible sources of a new "something else" to turn to? If there were some radical leader other than Mr. Roosevelt, if Huey Long had lived, this might have been his opportunity. (It is possible history may say that Mr. Roosevelt's great contribution was that he kept the Huey Longs and the other more violent radicals off our necks until there was time for the country to return to a calmer mood.

Lacking any Huey Long or other extreme radical, the only other "something else" for the country to turn to is the conservatives, both those within the Democratic Party and the Republicans. That was the spirit in which Congress acted. And the spirit of Congress was the spirit of the country. The Congressmen who rejected the President's program know what their people are thinking. Every member of the House (except such few as retire voluntarily) comes up for renomination a little more than seven months from now. They did not act like men who were taking their political lives in their hands, but rather like men eagerly reflecting the mood of their districts.

Faith In New Deal Is Growing Cold

IF BUSINESS does not turn better in 60 to 90 days, even if it does not turn better before next year's Presidential election, still the country is likely to carry on with the intention of letting the conservatives see what they can do.

After the conservatives get their chance in the election of 1940, and after and if the conservatives fail—then, in 1944 Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal might get a second chance. But popular faith in the New Deal, having grown cold, can hardly again be worked up before the 1940 election.

All this, so far, is on the assumption that business does not turn markedly better in the next 60 or 90 days. But there is at least a chance that business may turn better. Business may see the sign that the New Deal, while not yet fully checked, is on the way out. And business may act on the sign, without waiting for the accomplished fact. Business may not yet see the green light, the "go" sign, but it may see the amber light. Politically, the amber light says that the red light has gone out; that there will be no extension of the New Deal. It says that a new Administration in 1941, whether Republican or conservative Democrat, will overhaul the New Deal, throw overboard the half of it that is wrong, save and make workable the half that is good.

True, many of the innovations set up by the New Deal still are in effect, and many of these are almost insuperable obstacles to recovery. Some of the persons who operate some parts of the New Deal, the more mordant left-wingers, are of a temper that would not facilitate recovery. But Mr. Roosevelt, after he emerges from the temporary irritation of setback, is likely to see that recovery would help him more than continued depression. To come to the end of his term with recovery rising, would make a much better record in history than to end his eight years in office without sight of an end to the depression which he so blithely and confidently said he would cure. If recovery starts, Mr. Roosevelt will not wish to check it, regardless of what some of his more recalcitrant subordinates might like.

The realization of war's ... has not yet prevented wars from breaking out. But it has undoubtedly increased what we might call the elasticity of peace. Because the peoples of the world hate and detest war, nations put up with actions which, in the past, would have caused the guns to go off by themselves. Yet even in our day there is a saturation point of tolerance beyond which the fear of war ceases to have force.

IT IS POSSIBLE that Europe has reached that saturation point. Last year Adolf Hitler was effectively able to capitalize the utter distaste of the peoples of Great Britain and France for war. It is doubtful if he can repeat his success this year. The psychological weapon which he was able to employ to force the British and French to capitulate may now actually operate against him. For the German people, as was made very clear at the time of the Munich crisis, have no stomach for war either. Thus if the Fuehrer persists in pursuing a warlike course without succeeding in intimidating Germany's rivals into another capitulation he may have to reckon with the revulsion of those under his rule when they see him carry the Reich to the brink of war.

The fact that he has won a long succession of victories without war has probably encouraged him to indulge this year and against Poland, for instance, in the tactics he employed last year against Czecho-Slovakia. The boring from within that kept the Sudetenland in a ferment finds ... they can in the ... more effectively because their resources are so much greater. And as, little by little, their margin of safety increases the panic mood which the totalitarian powers have been seeking to create in democratic lands has tended to vanish. Yet it is that panic mood which Hitler and Mussolini have been counting on to achieve new bloodless victories.

AFTER THE first Battle of the Marne the war of maneuver came to an end. The World War became a war of attrition. That was enormously costly, both in blood and treasure. But with flank attacks difficult because, on the one hand, the Central Powers controlled the Dardanelles and, on the other, the British dominated the seas, measures of attrition continued to be employed. In the end, the war was won by the coalition that could outstay the other, since it enjoyed a superiority in resources.

The situation today is somewhat parallel. If the present peace of attrition continues there can be no doubt that the result will be disastrous to the totalitarian states. Their resources being more limited than that of their opponents, their staying power is, ipso facto, less great. It is possible, however, that faced with this possibility of ultimate exhaustion they will seek to break the developing deadlock through a flank attack. Which is precisely why, in this month of sun and harvest, when nature summons men to relax and enjoy themselves, Europe has become an armed camp.

Parran Favors Federal Aid for Private Hospitals

Denver, Aug. 7 (AP).—A Federal health program should bring "more instead of less use" of private health agencies, Surgeon General Parran, of the United States Public Health Service, said today.

"I can see no fundamental objection to including in a national health program a provision authorizing assistance for the construction or modernization of nonprofit hospitals," Dr. Parran told the National Conference of Catholic Charities.

Opposition to the hospital aid phase of the proposed Federal health program had been expressed by the National Catholic Hospital Association.

Baking Delicacy

For a "roll up and bake" dessert try this: Spread butter, brown sugar and cinnamon on a half-inch layer of soft biscuit dough. Cover with an inch layer of seeded red cherries or strawberries. Roll quickly, pinch the edges together, slip into a buttered loaf pan and bake 30 minutes in a moderate oven. Serve hot with cream or lemon sauce.

made the tenants ... in a den of extortionists by the high phone charges.

It just didn't make sense.

If it is fair to charge a hotel guest or an apartment tenant a half dollar for a 30-cent call, why not put in a water meter and charge him for his key to the room?

The hotel men have their side. They claim the telephone company socks 'em so much for installing the exchange board, etc., that they lose money on the phone service at best. However, after September 1, by order of the public service commission, lower rates in New York must be put in force. After that date a phone in the room won't seem like a financial hazard.

Of course, this is just a New York ruling, but the rest of the country is apt to get the idea.

All of which will be pretty nice. In all this talk of a broader life it will seem swell to be able to telephone from a hotel and remain solvent.

Cinema Note

If Wyatt Earp, famous frontier town sheriff, were alive, there would be at least two new graves over on Boot Hill. Sam Hellman would be in one and Allan Dwan in the other. Mr. Hellman is the author and Mr. Dwan is the director of "Frontier Marshal," a screen play about Mr. Earp, and what they have done to him, to his career and to his friend, Doc Holliday, is grounds for gunplay.

The screen play is based on Stuart Lake's great story of Wyatt Earp's career as the sheriff in several Western frontier towns. Every chapter of this book was a realistic thriller and we have been waiting for a screen presentation. Well, we've seen it and you'd never know the boys. One of the epic battles of the Old West was that fought between Sheriff Earp and three or four companions, including Doc Holliday, against a gang of outlaws in the Okay Corral. Every move in it was given by Mr. Lake, and the scene was a natural for the screen. But in "Frontier Marshal" it's just another cowboy fight. The sheriff, foolhardy, childish and absurd, goes alone to the corral and mops up the whole gang in as incredible a scene as Hollywood ever turned out. And Doc Holliday dies before the battle is even discussed. Get up, Sheriff! Get up out of that grave, Doc. Thar's some shootin' to be done!

Coming And Going

Taken as a whole no business group has been more perturbed than the bankers at the steady encroachment of government on functions in the past regarded as wholly the affair of private enterprise. No group has been louder, not to say more querulous, in its lamentations over the tendency to whittle away managerial freedom.

Consequently it is somewhat ironic that a big San Francisco bank should have advanced the argument, in opposing regulation under the Wagner Labor Relations Act, that national banks are merely agencies of the Federal Government and therefore not private employers within the purview of the act. There seems here an anxiety, more understandable than logical, to have a cake while simultaneously eating it.

In time to come, unless certain present trends are successfully reversed, it very likely will be possible to argue that national banks are indeed nothing more than slavish instrumentalities of an all-powerful Federal financial policy. Perhaps that will be true when and if the current case is carried to the Supreme Court. But at the moment the National Labor Relations Board seems on firm ground in deciding that it has jurisdiction in the case of an employe allegedly dismissed for union activity.

The officers of the San Francisco bank, on the other hand, are certainly justified in taking an appeal. Caught between the upper millstone of increasing governmental regulation and the lower stone of growing pressure from organized labor, they may be pardoned for asking a final ruling as to the mill for which the grist of their being is ultimately designated.

Improper Solicitation

In at least one Government department, it appears, active solicitation is now under way to secure contributions for housing the collection of Roseveltiana which the President proposes to establish on his Hyde Park estate.

Over the signature of Charles B. Ingram, assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, mimeographed appeals have been distributed by official messengers "to all Washington employes" of the Department of Agriculture. These appeals explain that $350,000 in public contributions is necessary to house the Roosevelt collection properly. A subscription blank is attached and employes of the Department of Agriculture are told by Mr. Ingram that "as a matter of convenience, arrangements have been made to clear contributions to this fund through my office."

The newly enacted Hatch law, directed against "pernicious political activities," is probably not broad enough to prevent this particular form of solicitation. While that is unfortunate it does not conceal the gross impropriety of using public money, public time and public offices in an attempt to shake down Government employes for an essentially private project on the part of the President or anyone else.

As we have said before in these columns, Mr. Roosevelt's interest in preserving intact his correspondence and private papers, his ship models, pictures, photographs and various memorabilia, is wholly worthy. But his desire to keep the material at Hyde Park, where it will be accessible to relatively few, emphasizes the personal character of the undertaking. And the more personal the project the more subject to condemnation any attempt to utilize the machinery of government for its furtherance.

All the public papers of President Roosevelt will, of course, become a part of the National Archives. It is highly probable that this division of the Government would be delighted to receive also, for careful preservation, any part of Mr. Roosevelt's correspondence bearing on problems of state. On the other hand it is wholly appropriate and desirable, if Mr. Roosevelt wishes to keep all this material as a private collection, that he should do so and associate with it all the books and pamphlets, pictures, prints and objets d'art which he desires to preserve.

But it is neither appropriate nor desirable for Administration underlings to solicit Government employes for financial assistance in housing Mr. Roosevelt's private collection. It is neither appropriate nor desirable, though admittedly it may be "convenient," to use Government offices to receive contributions for such an end.

In his shakedown letter Mr. Ingram tells Department of Agriculture employes that "this matter is brought to your attention for consideration." There is a related matter, which ought to be brought to Mr. Ingram's attention, "for consideration." It is the wholly improper and thoroughly inexcusable character of his attempt to mingle private promotion activities with Government business.

Certain clarifying amendments to the Hatch law are promised at the next session of Congress. One of the most urgent is expansion of the act, so as to prevent public servants from acting as private solicitation agents.

Satellite Of The Axis

When Gen. Franco reviewed the victory parade held in Madrid last May he wore the red beret of the Traditionalists, who dream of remaking Spain in the image of the past. But the rest of his uniform was that worn by the Falangists, whose ideology is that of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy.

Franco's dress on that occasion reflected the duality of the movement which he heads and also the inner conflict which, repressed while civil war raged, was certain to come to the surface once victory had been achieved. Since then there has been no love lost between the Traditionalists and the Falangists, their mutual rivalry threatening to multiply the very considerable difficulties of the new regime.

The struggle between these anti-Republican groups has so far been unequal. The Traditionalists provided Franco with some of his best fighters. But the Falangists, who numbered little more than a handful at the outset of the civil war but have since grown numerous, have the support of the axis powers since they favor the closest kind of co-operation with Berlin and Rome. Therefore, unless Franco was prepared to break with Hitler and Mussolini, without whose assistance his revolt would probably have been quickly suppressed, it was practically inevitable that he would have to favor the Falangists.

A fortnight ago Franco deposed several outstanding monarchists, including Gen. Queipo de Llano, military governor of Seville and Gen. Juan Yague, commander of the Moroccan army corps. The other day he went further and, formally assuming the dictatorship of Spain, gave to the Falange control over the country's vital policies and departments.

This action comes as no surprise. Long since an order was issued by the Burgos regime merging the Traditionalists and the Falangists in one party with Franco assuming the title of "El Caudillo," i. e. chief or fuehrer. But this union of rivals was more nominal than actual. Behind the screen of one-party government the rival groups continued to struggle for power.

It remains to be seen whether the present decree, ordering the immediate execution of the previous edict of fusion, will meet with wholehearted acceptance or whether it will merely intensify the obvious difficulties of the Nationalist regime. It is nonetheless significant that the action has been taken at this time.

At the present juncture of affairs in Europe, Spain's position is of vital strategic importance. To assure at least the neutrality of the Franco government, France and Great Britain have gone out of their way in courting the Caudillo. Last month, for instance, France ordered the repatriation of $39,730,000 in Spanish gold stored in French banks by the fallen Republic.

The German and Italian governments, however, have been no less determined that their efforts in Franco's behalf would not go unrewarded. It now appears that they have won out. In according the Falange party dominance over Spain's foreign policy Franco has accepted the Falangist program of close and intimate relations with the axis powers, whose political systems and whose ideology Spain is now also to share.

So-o Big!

Mayor LaGuardia has not seriously injured his prestige among the New York City masses by his exhortation to the heads of municipal departments and of private businesses to give their employes Saturdays off in order to permit them to see the World's Fair. Even those who may be so unregenerate as to prefer to spend the Saturday holiday at Coney Island or the Yankee Stadium or the Bronx Zoo are likely to have a grateful thought for the Mayor.

However, Mr. LaGuardia's request seems due to something more than solicitude for his own popularity or even for the cultural well-being of his townsmen. The truth is that attendance at the World of Tomorrow has thus far been a sore disappointment to its sponsors. It is true that in the three months since the fair opened the attendance figures have been larger than for any other fair over any comparable period. But with the summer more than half over the attendance figure of 60,000,000 so cheerfully forecast by the experts in nowhere in sight.

Considering that there is no admission charge to most of the more interesting exhibits at the fair, the standard admission price of 75 cents may not seem unduly high. Persons blessed with reasonably sound wind and metatarsal arches, who have no particular yearning to drop in parachutes or gaze at embalmed female anatomies, may see a great many marvels without spending more than the cost of subway fare and the general admission ticket. For those who can afford to come to New York from distant parts of the country the admission charge is an insignificant factor in the general total.

With New Yorkers it is different. It is pretty well known that many of them are poor people who have to think twice before spending 75 cents on anything besides the barest creature comforts. Moreover, it is impossible for any one person to see more than a portion of all that is worth seeing at the fair in any one day. Two, three, four trips are required to make anything more than a superficial coverage of these 1,216 acres on which $155,000,000 worth of signs and wonders have been assembled. Seventy-five-cent tickets and five-cent subway fares multiplied three or four times make a considerable total. Multiplied again by the membership of an average family it can become prohibitive.

How attendance will be affected by the new reduced rates remains to be seen. Last week-end the figures, to the great joy of Mr. Whalen, took a lusty jump. But it begins to appear that the World of Tomorrow, like so many other things in the world of today, is too big for its own good.

Britain's Reward

From the available evidence there seems good reason to believe that the Japanese air raid which destroyed two British Yangtze River steamers at Ichang was a deliberate and premeditated act.

The two ships were moored at a spot which was known as an anchorage for foreign vessels. There was no secret as to their identity. Nor was there any military objective anywhere in the vicinity to give the Japanese the excuse that the bombings were merely a matter of bad marksmanship. Indeed, except for a few desultory bombs dropped on nearby Ichang, apparently for form's sake, that town was left alone. The Japanese army aviators concentrated their attack on the British vessels in the river and on a British oil company's establishment nearby.

To obtain insurance against this sort of molestation, Great Britain recently paid a great price. On July 24 the London government formally recognized the "special requirements" of the Japanese forces in China and agreed to instruct British authorities and British nationals to do nothing to interfere with the carrying out of these "special requirements" by the Japanese. The reward has been an intensification rather than a relaxation of the anti-British campaign.

The military authorities in Japan have never taken very kindly to the negotiations undertaken by the Tokyo government with Great Britain for the settlement of the Tientsin dispute. Apparently they have no desire to see these negotiations succeed. And what little chance of success there is will soon disappear if British rights continue to be flouted.

Once again the Japanese army is taking the bit in its teeth, revealing contempt of and indifference to British warnings, such as that voiced by Premier Chamberlain recently when he declared that Great Britain might find it necessary to send a fleet to the Far East.

A Successful Operation

From "DOCTOR, HERE'S YOUR HAT!" by Dr. Joseph A. Jerger. Published by Prentice-Hall, Inc.

Old Doc taught me early what a disturbing factor fear may be and how a mind full of fear is capable of building symptoms that baffle understanding. And Old Doc never failed to evaluate seriously the sufferings of this type of patient.

The first of such cases I saw was that of a middle-aged farmer's wife who came into the office one day. She could not sleep. She could do no chores. She got no rest because of a ringing in one ear and erratic pains over the right side of her head. She complained of dizziness and nausea. On examination I found no traces of disease. Then Old Doc took her over. "Now, you sit right here and tell me just what it is you want to get rid of." "That ringing in my ears. That awful all-over sick feeling, and the pains in my head." After a few irrelevant questions, Old Doc said, "Now tell me what the ringing in your ears feels like." "Well, it sounds like two rolls of a mill slowly grinding in there. Sounds as if they are grinding something gritty. Like cereal."

"Then the pain and dizziness come from the constant grinding of what you believe to be cereal?" asked Old Doc. "Yes," she said defiantly, "that's how it appears to me."

"Take this medicine," said Doc, handing her a few harmless pills with elaborate instructions. "Come back to me in two days and I will be able to cure you."

Before the woman returned, Doc carefully arranged the treatment room. The table was squarely in the middle; around it on smaller tables he spread the entire contents of the instrument cases till the place looked more like an arsenal than a doctor's office. The poor woman arrived, looked, and trembled. She was invited to disrobe and mount the table. Her face was covered with an ether mask, and then Old Doc went to work.

He pulled from a remote cabinet a large veterinary syringe and a package of cereal. He filled a basin with water, then poured a handful of cereal. All this time he kept up a running stream of conversation about what he was going to extract from her brain. The squirt gun was brought into action. The woman rebelled against the repeated squirts of water into her ear. Finally Doc gave a yell of relief and triumph. The operation was successful. The mill had run out of material as he extracted the last of the cereal. The woman sat up and gazed at the basin full of cereal. "Oh, Doctor, heaven be praised! The ringing and pains have stopped!"

The patient, with renewed hope, paid the fee of $1 and went off happy.

"Hyphenated Democrats"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Hyphenated Democrats" combined with Republicans to destroy progressive principles in a spirit of disloyalty to their party have been known before.

In 1910, when Democrats were trying to overthrow the rule of Joe Cannon in the House of Representatives, 23 Democrats under the leadership of Congressman Fitzgerald, voted with stand-pat Republicans in opposition to their party principles.

So, today, Democrats can combine with Republicans to defeat the President; but, can they combine with Republicans to re-elect themselves? DAVID WHITNEY.

The Alien Bills, Pro And Con

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With due respect for another's opinion and his right to express that opinion, I would like to comment upon the views expressed by two writers whose letters were published in The Post of August 3 concerning the recent alien bills.

The letter signed by "A Citizen" asks concerning the bill (H. R. 5138) introduced by Representative Howard Smith of Virginia: "First of all, who are aliens?" then he continues: "What may be an alien to one person is a citizen to another." I am at a loss to understand the full meaning here. Is he referring to what constitutes an 'alien' under the bill, or is it an independent statement? If it is the latter, than I think it will be well to note Section 1 of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution in which 'citizen' is defined. I doubt that it is a matter of personal opinion. Those not within this definition should then be aliens.

The last paragraph of this letter appears to be a contradiction in terms. The writer said that the patriots who fought for this country 150 years ago will have died in vain should this bill pass the Senate. Is it not true that those very patriots fought and died in order that they could be free from interference from other countries? Is it not true that this bill is designed to prevent similar interference? Is it necessary that we ultimately resort to offering the youth of this country on the sacrificial altar of war in order to justify our birthright?

In the letter written by Elizabeth Lyle it was stated that the only way to check on aliens, if they were required to register would be to stop every citizen at various times for proof of the citizenship status. It hardly seems possible that an efficient system could not be devised whereby aliens could be registered without interfering with citizens of this country. On the contrary, I believe that a satisfactory method can be established because a registered alien is not a citizen.

It is true, however, that one of the alien bills, namely the Hobbs bill (H. R. 5643) contains a flaw in that the "good cause" phrase is vague. What constitutes a good cause would be dependent upon the interpretation given by various administrative officials. Despite this, however, this bill is applicable only to the detention of certain aliens and it is limited to deportable aliens as are criminals, narcotic smugglers, etc. In the final analysis, nine well-known men might decide the issue.

ELLSWORTH T. SIMPSON.
Arlington, Va., Aug. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Unknown and confusing to the great majority of the American people there were at present some sixty or seventy—a staggering number—of antialien, antidemocratic bills before the recent Congress. These measures, if passed, would have destroyed the civil liberties of the people of this Nation.

A list of forty-some odd proposed bills of this type was published at the National Emergency Conference, held in this city quite recently, for the purpose of concentrating authoritative opinion and of spreading reports of the various repressive alien legislation before Congress.

The conference was attended by such brilliant champions of human dignity as Mgr. John A. Ryan, Vihjalmur Stafansson, Dr. Henry S. Leiper, foreign secretary for the Federal Council of Churches; John Brophy, national director of the C. I. O.; Senator James E. Murray, of Montana; Dr. Harold Urey, winner of the Nobel prize in chemistry, and Deputy Commissioner Edward J. Shaughnessy, of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service. All of these men agreed that from every viewpoint these measures are dangerous wedges for fascism.

Of course, one can see the gradual encroachment of our civil rights which these pending measures hold. They are thoroughly unjustified, as a few pertinent facts released by the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service suffice to show.

There are only 3,500,000 aliens in the United States today. The number of noncitizens has decreased 50 per cent since 1930. There is a loss of 225,000 aliens yearly. In 1938 68,000 were admitted—284,000 were removed by citizenship, departure, or death. Therefore, the ratio of decrease over increase is 4 to 1. Only one-third of 1 per cent of 1,000,000 seamen who came here in 1938 jumped their ships. Only 4,000 visitors overstayed their leave. The number of competitors for jobs, if all immigration would cease, would have the trivial reduction of one-half of 1 percent.

Organized labor has always opposed cheap foreign labor. And it has always fought for immigration restrictions. Yet today, though it has the largest unemployment record in the history of the Nation, labor is opposing alien deportation or further immigration restrictions. Why? Progressive organized labor has gone on record against such actions for they represent reactionary interests carried against the entire social and labor legislation of the past seven years. So the excuse of the legislators that aliens are keeping Americans unemployed is shown to be unfounded. Labor would have been the first to acknowledge alien restriction if that were the truth.

One of the most apparent reasons for the suggestions of halting all immigration is the attempt to defeat the Wagner refugee bill. Senator Wagner's proposal for the admission of 20,000 refugee children, Protestant, Jewish, and Catholic, which has the wholehearted support of every intelligent and decent-minded person on the national scene.

In the establishment of any sort of regimentation here citizens can clearly see the first sign of fascism. They are selecting a group of people to be ostracized. First, it will be the native born against the foreign born. Then it will be turned against the Negro — the Jew — the Catholic. Finally it will be nihilism—mass regimentation—complete fascism.

It's now or never for a Democratic America!

STANLEY C. GARTENHAUS.

Coin For Sales Tax

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is now practically conceded by all thinking men that a national old-age pension is the solution to the unemployment and business stagnation problem. But the great sticker is the method of financing the scheme. I think a national sales tax of 2 per cent on all sales for use and not for resale is the answer.

I propose that the Government coin a new coin called the "mill." We already have the mill in our system of money. Ten mills make 1 cent. Then tax all sales of 3c to 5c one mill; all sales 5c to 10c two mills; 10c to 20c, four mills; 20c to 30c, six mills; 30c to 50c 10 mills, or 1 cent, and every 50-cent sale or multiple thereof; after that tax it 2c or 1c, or 10 mills.

Purchasers can then buy the mills from the Government and pay their tax as they make the purchases. All purchases that paid a tax of 1c and over can be paid with the present type of coin. This would give the Nation a greater purchasing power and it would also do away with tokens in other States, because it would be only a short while before the States would use the mills to pay their different sales taxes. And this extra money would be a circulating medium which we badly need.

In addition to the retail sales tax place a 2 per cent tax on wholesales; 2 per cent on manufactured articles, and 2 per cent on all wages and salaries and incomes and then take off the social security wage tax. In this way we can grant all over age 60 a $60 per month pension, both man and wife, on the condition that they both cease all gainful pursuit.

ELBERT EASTMAN.

Unicameral Legislature

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A great deal has been said about duplication in Governmental agencies. One of the most outstanding examples is the Senate taking up a bill which has passed the House. Since the House is elected by the voters, it is totally unnecessary to have a Senate pass upon a bill already approved. The consistent thing to do is to abolish the Senate. Or, keep the Senate and abolish the House.

Whenever 51 per cent of the elected membership of the House approve a bill it should be law, without necessity of going through the Senate. Neither should a bill approved by 51 per cent of the House be subject to veto. This makes a one-man government.

An instance in point is where the Senate recently behind closed doors destroyed the improved retirement bill passed by the House. An ideal retirement law, and one that is coming, is a 10 per cent contribution by employes, none by the Government and compulsory retirement after 30 years' service, or at age 64, with retirement pay three-fourths of salary. A something for something law.

Let the Senate be abolished, the members of the House paid a modern compensation in the neighborhood of $50,000 a year each, and we will then get a modern government. Abolish the veto and pay the President $1,000,000 salary a year. H. H. W.
Annandale, Va., August 4.

Mr. Bondy's Salary

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a recent issue you state that the newly appointed director of public welfare, who receives only $8,000, anticipates a salary of $8,500 under the next appropriations act.

Why shouldn't the Board of Public Welfare take this additional $500 from the Social Security fund for the aged, blind and dependent?

Perhaps the new director is too high minded to accept the bread out of the mouths of the helpless! I hope so.

On Being 29

YOU GET so you like to talk about how long it has been since you had a new suit, but you don't really mind half as much as missing your coffee in the morning. You wish you could be by yourself and think once in a while, but when your wife goes away you don't do a thing but sit up and read the Saturday Evening Post until you go to sleep with the climax of a story in sight. Then you call her up and can't think of anything to say.

You rent a house with an acre of ground around it so you can get out in the sun, and then you never can find time to do anything outdoors. You acquire a seed catalogue and can taste every vegetable in it. You get out your tennis shoes and look at them, and in the process you disturb an old football jersey with moth-webs clinging to it and wonder why you don't throw it away. But you don't.

You have had a lot of friends, but they all seem to be somewhere else, and you talk to them about getting together, but seldom do. After a while you begin to wonder if they really are friends, and now that you think about it you haven't a thing in common with them. The married ones have their own affairs to attend to, and the unmarried ones are embarrassed to bring their men or their girls around old married people.

You make an effort, surprise your spouse and suggest inviting Mary and old Bill to the house for dinner. She makes an effort, too, the silver and the Ambassador Ware are extracted from the attic, the extra leaf is put in the table. You call Bill and it's wonderful, they can come out that night.

Dinner is late and it's the best you've ever eaten and the best old Bill has ever eaten either. It really is. You eat more steak than you ever thought possible, and afterward you and old Bill sit up and go to sleep while the girls get terribly interested in something, you never find out what. After a while it's time to go home and Bill has had the best time in years and so have you and both of you are regarding the vision of a bed as a failing swimmer regards a boat.

Of an afternoon you switch on the radio while you tie your shoes before going out to sit in the yard, and the baseball game is on and you stay listening to it until time to go to the office for the night's work. You think about the approach of football season and feel bad because you know you'll be asking for free passes, although you haven't paid your alumni dues or contributed to the athletic fund. But then you remember about the last time you went back to the university and about the people who invited you to come around for a drink after the game and then didn't recognize you when you got there.

You know by this time that you will never write a novel or play or learn to draw or perform on the piano; that you will never be the whiz in business you once knew you could be or the banquet speaker you pictured yourself. The snap has gone out of your mind just as the old feeling of unflagging power has gone from your legs and shoulders. The only vanity which remains, since you probably don't get around to giving it the test, is a delusion that you have an infallible charm for the other sex.

Your old ambitions haunt you and at times you feel very sorry for yourself, but outwardly you present a picture of thickening comfort. Your daily failures and disappointments do not embarrass you half as much as the memory of silly things you did and defeats you suffered and chances you muffed and naive conceptions you formed when you were younger. Your old girls, most of whom you would not know by sight, enter largely into this nostalgic picture. You spend a great deal of time wondering how you ever could have been such an unmitigated fool and if it's possible that you still might be. No, it isn't possible—and perhaps that, too, is something to be regretted.

You are glad that you have a son and you hope he will be great because it is time somebody in the family was being great again and you know you never will be. You are not, of course, going to make the mistake your father made when he decided you were to be all the things he wanted to be and couldn't. But that is exactly what you are doing already. Well, life goes on, you think, from generation to generation. And somewhere it crops up into something more than just life. Sooner or later . . .

In another year you'll be 30.

TURNER ROSE.

In Other Words

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Westbrook Pegler's story of George Spelvin and the maid Hattie in a recent edition of The Post was a bit long-winded. What Mr. Pegler might have said was:

In their treatment of their maid, Hattie, the Spelvin family sowed the wind and reaped the whirlwind. Organized labor ought to be careful not to sow too much wind. There is a law of diminishing returns and it works both ways.

Fair Enough

Shedding Tears

I HEARD the other night on the air, in a discussion of various topics, a young orator whom we will call Elliott Roosevelt deploring the heartlessness of those who had opposed the housing bill on politico-economic grounds. In the course of this address in which, toward the end, the profit motive was revealed with elephantine subtlety, our orator grew almost tearful about a blue-eyed, elfin child who lacked the material comforts of a good home. She lived in the slums.

We received the benefit of his wisdom and highmindedness on the subject of slums and their effect on the young, and as he talked I just wished that he had found time to discuss the importance of patience, morality and integrity in the home and the effect on children of the abandonment of one parent by the other and, later, complete divorce. It seemed to me that this young statesman valued plumbing, certified milk, clothing, play-space and other material comforts far above, indeed to the total exclusion, of all the other factors that contribute to the moral and spiritual well-being of a child.

Perhaps it were tactless of me to mention the matter and it may have been only for reasons of good taste that he himself refrained from speaking of divorce as a possible affliction to children who find themselves caught in a middle of he-and-she fights in the family circle. The divorce rate in this country has now risen to about one in six marriages and someone's best friends, and I suppose most important advisers, are divorced, so we may here have created another taboo.

However, along with those graphs and time-table statistics which show the proportion of former newsboys in American prisons there are some which indicate the proportions of prisoners who came from broken and disrupted homes and whose waywardness is attributed to this condition.

Divorce Is Luxury For Those Of Slums

THIS PROPORTION is very high. Divorce is a luxury which is sparingly patronized by the poor people of the slums, so one may take it that the broken-home criminals in prison did not come from such neighborhoods but from homes in which squalor was spiritual not material and, in some cases, undoubtedly chargeable to the selfishness or worse fault of one or more parents. Squalor is not only physical.

It exists in luxurious homes in the high suburbs and cases of waywardness have occurred in which young offenders received lenience or sympathy on the ground that the moral surroundings of well provided homes were bad.

Now, no sensible person would undertake to argue that poverty, hunger and dirt are good for growing children, although Abe Lincoln is one among many who could be cited as exceptions to the general theme that such childhood conditions must produce waste citizens. Ever so many eminent Americans of the generation which is now distinctly old came from homes in neighborhoods which were undoubtedly slums.

They, too, were the children of immigrants and were raised in poverty but, given decency and a certain type of gameness in the parents, the children grew to maturity with character and took their place in society on equality, at least, with others who were raised in riches.

Elliott Charges Political Motives

OF COURSE, gameness in the parents, gameness of character, is important because without it, in slum or mansion, one or the other may tire easily of little faults and annoyances, and, out of selfishness, deprive the children of their moral due. Most divorces are granted on grounds so petty that it is obvious that someone, not necessarily the plaintiff, has been guilty of a serious breach of good citizenship if it be granted that the marriage relations, the home and the family are important factors in the life of a civilized state.

Young Mr. Roosevelt, with a graceful flight of oratory, avoided examination of the reasons why those who voted against the housing bill voted as they did. He seemed to impute to them only heartlessness and political motives and proposed, just rhetorically, of course, that those statesmen, for the good of their souls and the souls of the slum children, be compelled to live for some time under practical conditions in the slums which they had refused to eradicate. There might be something to that.

I further suggest that if Congress were to examine the divorce traffic, the flippancy with which some parents far removed from the slums shirk off their moral obligations to their children, they might arouse a serious popular demand for a national law which would make it impossible for a young man with no excuse of poverty or ignorance to abandon a wife with a new-born child and leave the young one fatherless.

Navy Orders Admiral Byrd To Active Duty

Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, who expects to sail in October for Antarctica where he will stake out United States claims to territory, yesterday was ordered to active duty by the Navy Department.

Although the orders set no date for Admiral Byrd to begin his service, it was understood he would have active status during the expedition to the southernmost continent.

Congress recently appropriated $360,000 for the undertaking.

Special Dispatch to The Post

The Export-Import Bank arranged yesterday to finance the sale of 250,000 bales of raw cotton to Spanish mills at the rate of 25,000 bales a month. The bank will provide 80 per cent of the credit, which probably will total around $10,000,000, and individual shippers will finance the balance.

The deal with Spain had been pending for some time, but Secretary Morgenthau opposed it pending settlement of title to $15,000,000 worth of silver from Spain.

The United States Government purchased 35,000 ounces of silver from the loyalist government in 1938, and the Bank of Spain filed suits to recover it on the ground that it belonged to the bank and the loyalists had no right to sell it. On July 14, Federal Judge Vincent L. Leibell, in New York, dismissed the action.

Repayable in Installments

Before this decision, Morgenthau feared that if the cotton were shipped the Franco government might seek to compel the United States to accept the silver as payment.

The Export-Import Bank announced today it had assurances from Spain that dollar exchange would be made available to meet all maturities in connection with the cotton deal.

Obligations incurred in the transaction will be repayable in eight quarterly installments beginning six months after delivery of the cotton. Commercial banks in this country will be authorized as agents. The cotton is to be shipped in American vessels.

Sale to France at Discount

The Commodity Credit Corporation holds some 11,000,000 bales of cotton as a result of $500,000,000 worth of crop loans and the Spanish sale is the fourth step taken recently to dispose of some of the surplus.

A cash sale of 135,000 bales to France and Switzerland was arranged at a discount of $8 a bale below the world price, representing the cost of one and one-half years' storage.

Find Increase Lost

In order to prevent a glut on the spot markets, the latter two arrangements provided that the cotton must be stored for use in war on similar emergency.

Warren Lee Pierson, president of the Export-Import Bank, was in New York today to perfect arrangements for the Spanish shipments. The credit was understood to have brought the total of the bank's commitments to $89,000,000 of its $100,000,000 revolving fund.

A provision to double this fund was included in the Administration's lending bill which failed of passage at the session of Congress just closed. Senator Taft (Republican), Ohio, proposed an amendment to cut the increase to $25,000,000 but the Senate accepted a compromise by Senator Barkley (Democrat) Kentucky, the majority leader, providing for $75,000,000. The House, however, refused to consider the bill.

D. C. Negligence Blamed for High Tuberculosis Toll

The negligence of the District government is responsible for the extremely high tuberculosis death rate in Washington, Dr. A. Barklie Coulter, director of the Bureau for Tuberculosis, charged yesterday.

Speaking to an audience of 100 WPA workers at the Housekeeping Aid Project headquarters, 61 I street northwest, Dr. Coulter pointed out that the death toll of the "white plague" was more than six times as high as the automobile death rate in 1938. The District, he said, is far behind most cities in this respect.

Backing up the argument of the District health officer for establishment of health centers throughout the city, Dr. Coulter explained that "it has been found necessary to bring the clinic facilities to the patients rather than the patients to the clinic. Public health is purchasable," Dr. Coulter insisted, where tuberculosis is concerned. He claimed that adequate appropriations would cut the T. B. rate here tremendously.

Life's Darkest Moment

By Lewis Gannett

IT IS, Vilhjalmur Stefansson says, introducing his book, "Iceland, the First American Republic" (Doubleday, $3.50), "high time that the United States and Canada discover the nation that discovered the mainland of North America."

Not that the discovery of the American continent seemed very important to the oldtime Icelanders. Mr. Stefansson admires Leif Ericson, but not above his fellows; in the minds of the Icelanders, he says, Eric the Red's settlements in Greenland, Leif's voyages to Labrador, and Thorfinn Karlsefni's attempted settlement on the continent in "Vinland" were no more significant than dozens of other high adventures—voyages through the Baltic and to Russia, foraging raids down the coasts of Spain and into the Mediterranean. And even in those days the Icelanders were such men of letters that they may have ranked higher those of their countrymen who served the courts of Europe as poets laureate than such mere seamen as Leif Ericson.

Good poets they were, too. Mr. Stefansson, who believes in this land of his ancestors, recalls that William Morris held that the Icelandic sagas should be to the British what the tale of Troy was to the Greeks. Without the Icelanders Wagner would never have had the stuff for his Nibelungenlied operas. Good Nazis have urged the Germans to substitute the Eddas for the Bible and make pilgrimages to Iceland, "the Holy Land of our religion;" and President Theodore Roosevelt used to hold his children enthralled by reading to them from Snorri Sturluson's "Heimskringla." The present Theodore Roosevelt, indeed, writes an enthusiastic introduction to Stefansson's book.

I LIKE Mr. Stefansson best when he is engaged in conscientiously proving that what most people believe is wrong. When he devotes himself to cataloging the exports and imports of Iceland, the numbers and pay of its doctors, and the meritorious achievements of its people, he is, it must be admitted, a bit on the dull side. But then, he admits having had the aid of a commissioner to the World's Fair, and that may have been depressing. When he escapes the Flushing Tomorrow, and writes of the Icelandic past, however, real eloquence stirs his pen.

For Iceland's story is amazing and neglected. One of Explorer Stefansson's hobbies, as most newspaper readers know, is the virtue of meat. Icelanders, he points out, for centuries ate almost no vegetables at all, but they have always had better teeth than any of the lettuce-munching nations. In another chapter, however, Stefansson records a recent rise in the Icelandic potato harvests; let us hope it does not ruin Iceland's teeth.

Another of Stefansson's passions is the comfort of life in the North. All Iceland, to be sure, lies well to the north of Greenland's Cape Farewell and of the tourist-visited Alaskan ports. But even in January, the indefatigable Stefansson insists, Reykjavik has a climate like that of Milan or Philadelphia. New York has experienced subzero temperatures 7 degrees lower than Reykjavik's coldest; yet in summer the Iceland city never knows an 80-degree day. It seems to be the Honolulu of the Arctic. In summer, too, Mr. Stefansson adds, you can read a book outdoors in Iceland at any hour of the day or night, which would be a boon to book reviewers. How dark it is in winter he does not say.

Iceland's forests are not immense, but she does not need to burn wood. The land is full of hot springs; indeed, we owe our word "geyser" to the Icelandic language. It means "gusher," and the geysers gush all about the island's capital. One section of the city is already heated by means of this natural hot-water supply; and latterly the vegetarians of the island—despite Mr. Stefansson's best efforts, some Icelanders demanded greens—have taken to heating immense hothouses from the hot springs, and so growing excellent flowers and vegetables even in that northern clime.

To this remarkable people we owe not only the discovery of our continent and much of our conception of democracy, but even our system. The Icelanders, indeed, experimented with the republican system long before our founding fathers began their constitutional experimentation. By 1261, Mr. Stefansson points out, Iceland had been a republic for 331 years, "which is 181 years longer than the United States has yet been a republic." Greenland copied the republican pattern from Iceland; according to the Stefanssonian count, the United States of America is ony the third American republic, and Haiti the fourth. (Those whose knowledge of geography is faulty will do well to read Stefansson's own explanation of Iceland as a part of America. You can see Greenland from the Iceland hills; you can't see Europe. And as to cultural backgrounds, Iceland is assuredly no more European than these United States).

Nor will Stefansson permit the Latin claim that while Icelanders may have discovered the American mainland, they also forgot it. The Icelanders kept constant contact with Labrador at least as late as 1347, and probably much later; papal documents make clear that Greenland falcons were shipped to Italy as late as 1396; and Columbus himself, before he sailed west across the Atlantic, had voyaged north to Iceland and beyond. Southrons used to think Columbus a liar because he reported the sea free of ice for 300 miles north of this misnamed island; but Columbus, says Stefansson, was right; and Columbus must have heard in the North of the Icelandic voyages.

THE ONE point at which Mr. Stefansson fails in his enthusiasm for Leif Ericson is in accrediting Leif's priority. Leif found his "Vinland" in the year 1000; and Mr. Stefansson suspects that unsung Scandinavians, and perhaps also Basques and Irishmen (the Irish were the first settlers in Iceland) may have preceded him.

On the moot question of the location of "Wineland the Good," Mr. Stefansson touches a note which will distress some of the patriots who claim proofs that Wineland was on Martha's Vineyard or Cape Cod. The Icelandic word, he says, is "vinder," which means "wineberries," and any berries from which wine can be made are to this day called wineberries in Norway. So the Icelandic explorers may have been referring to crowberries or cranberries, not, as has been assumed, to grapes; and in that case, one of the major buttresses of the argument that they sailed south to within the present territory of the United States falls dismally.

There is one point in Stefansson's book, however, which is puzzling. Between 1870 and 1900, he says, a third of the island's population migrated to Canada and the United States. If that is true, can Iceland, after all, be Paradise?

President Irritated

By Mark Sullivan

New Deal Checked

IN EVERY Washington conversation, there is first a certain amount of post mortem, and then the question of the future, "What next?" In nearly every answer, the state of business is given as a clew to the next development.

President Roosevelt, evidently thinks so. When defeat of his lending program fell upon him, his comment to his press conference was in terms of the future state of business. He said that if Congress had given him the $3,000,000,000 he asked, the money would have shown itself in the form of better business conditions in from 60 to 90 days. The implication was that because he did not get the $3,000,000,000, business would not improve. The further implication was that if business does not improve, the country will blame Congress, and will again give its support to the President.

That is the way Mr. Roosevelt seems to read the cards. But the President's reading is the reading of one self-interested, and one who speaks in the irritation of defeat.

For a more detached clew, turn back to a remark the President made early in his Administration. He said the New Deal philosophy is to do something; if it doesn't work, do something else.

Same Old Device With A New Name

THE PRESIDENT has tried many things. That they did not work is shown by many conditions—crop prices lower than any year since 1933, unemployment almost as great as in 1933, with public debt at a new high and still increasing. And the President was at the end of his "something elses." His final something else, the lending bill, was not a something else at all. It was the same old device with a new name—what Mr. Roosevelt now called "Government lending" was the same thing he had formerly called "Government spending."

This Congress realized. More than anything else, Congress was saying to the President: "We've tried your devices and they have failed and we're through with them." If Congress were told by Mr. Roosevelt that as a result of their action, depression would continue, and that something must be done—if Congress had been told that, Congress would have replied: "All right, maybe we'll have to try something else, but if so, it won't be your something else; if the sickness continues, we'll get a new doctor."

If the threat becomes actuality, if there is not business improvement, what are the possible sources of a new "something else" to turn to? If there were some radical leader other than Mr. Roosevelt, if Huey Long had lived, this might have been his opportunity. (It is possible history may say that Mr. Roosevelt's great contribution was that he kept the Huey Longs and the other more violent radicals off our necks until there was time for the country to return to a calmer mood.

Lacking any Huey Long or other extreme radical, the only other "something else" for the country to turn to is the conservatives, both those within the Democratic Party and the Republicans. That was the spirit in which Congress acted. And the spirit of Congress was the spirit of the country. The Congressmen who rejected the President's program know what their people are thinking. Every member of the House (except such few as retire voluntarily) comes up for renomination a little more than seven months from now. They did not act like men who were taking their political lives in their hands, but rather like men eagerly reflecting the mood of their districts.

Faith In New Deal Is Growing Cold

IF BUSINESS does not turn better in 60 to 90 days, even if it does not turn better before next year's Presidential election, still the country is likely to carry on with the intention of letting the conservatives see what they can do.

After the conservatives get their chance in the election of 1940, and after and if the conservatives fail—then, in 1944 Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal might get a second chance. But popular faith in the New Deal, having grown cold, can hardly again be worked up before the 1940 election.

All this, so far, is on the assumption that business does not turn markedly better in the next 60 or 90 days. But there is at least a chance that business may turn better. Business may see the sign that the New Deal, while not yet fully checked, is on the way out. And business may act on the sign, without waiting for the accomplished fact. Business may not yet see the green light, the "go" sign, but it may see the amber light. Politically, the amber light says that the red light has gone out; that there will be no extension of the New Deal. It says that a new Administration in 1941, whether Republican or conservative Democrat, will overhaul the New Deal, throw overboard the half of it that is wrong, save and make workable the half that is good.

True, many of the innovations set up by the New Deal still are in effect, and many of these are almost insuperable obstacles to recovery. Some of the persons who operate some parts of the New Deal, the more mordant left-wingers, are of a temper that would not facilitate recovery. But Mr. Roosevelt, after he emerges from the temporary irritation of setback, is likely to see that recovery would help him more than continued depression. To come to the end of his term with recovery rising, would make a much better record in history than to end his eight years in office without sight of an end to the depression which he so blithely and confidently said he would cure. If recovery starts, Mr. Roosevelt will not wish to check it, regardless of what some of his more recalcitrant subordinates might like.

Peace Of Attrition

By Barnet Nover

Europe's White War

IT IS ESTIMATED that by the end of this month there will be no fewer than 8,000,000 men under arms in Europe and that estimate leaves out Russia and the so-called neutral states. This is far from the full war strength which the nations of the Old World are able to muster. But the total is very much greater than they have ever before found it necessary to mobilize in time of peace.

The fact is that Europe today is in a twilight zone between peace and war. Peace used to be a dynamic state. It has become merely a static condition—the absence of war in its conventional form of wholesale blood letting. Not inaccurately, therefore, the state of Europe today has been described as that of a "white war." It can also be described as a peace of attrition.

IT USED to be argued in the old days that the progress of science would sooner or later make war so horrible and destructive that the very thought of its ravages would compel nations to remain at peace.

It has not worked out that way. War's horrors have, indeed, enormously multiplied. But wars continue to be fought. During the past eight years there has hardly been a single day without bloody international combat somewhere in the world. And some of the wars, notably the Sino-Japanese struggle, now in its third year, and the Spanish war, which lasted almost three years, have been on a very large scale.

The realization of war's horrors has not yet prevented wars from breaking out. But it has undoubtedly increased what we might call the elasticity of peace. Because the peoples of the world hate and detest war, nations put up with actions which, in the past, would have caused the guns to go off by themselves. Yet even in our day there is a saturation point of tolerance beyond which the fear of war ceases to have force.

IT IS POSSIBLE that Europe has reached that saturation point. Last year Adolf Hitler was effectively able to capitalize the utter distaste of the peoples of Great Britain and France for war. It is doubtful if he can repeat his success this year. The psychological weapon which he was able to employ to force the British and French to capitulate may now actually operate against him. For the German people, as was made very clear at the time of the Munich crisis, have no stomach for war either. Thus if the Fuehrer persists in pursuing a warlike course without succeeding in intimidating Germany's rivals into another capitulation he may have to reckon with the revulsion of those under his rule when they see him carry the Reich to the brink of war.

The fact that he has won a long succession of victories without war has probably encouraged him to indulge this year and against Poland, for instance, in the tactics he employed last year against Czecho-Slovakia. The boring from within that kept the Sudetenland in a ferment finds a parallel in the steady infiltration of Nazi storm troopers and agents into Danzig.

The campaign of vituperation employed against the Prague government is being duplicated in the campaign now being waged in the Nazi press and by Nazi spokesmen against Poland. Even the atrocity stories are exactly the same.

THE DIFFERENCE is that the effectiveness of these tactics has been reduced partly because they have become familiar and partly because those against whom they are being employed have learned how to fight them.

The lesson of the World War has thus been repeated. The first appearance of poison gas, the first use of tanks, left the enemy bewildered. But in due course the gas mask and the antitank guns were developed and, what is more, the other side also learned how to manufacture and employ these weapons.

The totalitarian states, taking a page out of Soviet Russia's book, have become effective masters of international propaganda. But their enemies have now also learned the trick and can be even more effective at this game because they can afford to indulge in the luxury of telling the truth which happens to be the very best kind of propaganda.

In rearmament, the structure of the Fascist state made it possible for Hitler and Mussolini to build up what appeared for a time an almost unchallengeable military machine. But Great Britain and France are now showing that two can play at this game, and that they can in the long run play it more effectively because their resources are so much greater. And as, little by little, their margin of safety increases the panic mood which the totalitarian powers have been seeking to create in democratic lands has tended to vanish. Yet it is that panic mood which Hitler and Mussolini have been counting on to achieve new bloodless victories.

AFTER THE first Battle of the Marne the war of maneuver came to an end. The World War became a war of attrition. That was enormously costly, both in blood and treasure. But with flank attacks difficult because, on the one hand, the Central Powers controlled the Dardanelles and, on the other, the British dominated the seas, measures of attrition continued to be employed. In the end, the war was won by the coalition that could outstay the other, since it enjoyed a superiority in resources.

The situation today is somewhat parallel. If the present peace of attrition continues there can be no doubt that the result will be disastrous to the totalitarian states. Their resources being more limited than that of their opponents, their staying power is, ipso facto, less great. It is possible, however, that faced with this possibility of ultimate exhaustion they will seek to break the developing deadlock through a flank attack. Which is precisely why, in this month of sun and harvest, when nature summons men to relax and enjoy themselves, Europe has become an armed camp.

Parran Favors Federal Aid for Private Hospitals

Denver, Aug. 7 (AP).—A Federal health program should bring "more instead of less use" of private health agencies, Surgeon General Parran, of the United States Public Health Service, said today.

"I can see no fundamental objection to including in a national health program a provision authorizing assistance for the construction or modernization of nonprofit hospitals," Dr. Parran told the National Conference of Catholic Charities.

Opposition to the hospital aid phase of the proposed Federal health program had been expressed by the National Catholic Hospital Association.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

A Break At Last

Hotel guests and apartment hotel tenants in New York and around the country have reason to feel a little happier these days. They can regard the telephone with less fear and look at the phone directory with less hard feeling. A public service commission has decided they are entitled to a fair break.

Although the hotel and apartment hotel men may not have known it, the public has been nourishing a peeve for years as a result of the high charges for telephone calls. In New York and other big cities it costs twice as much to make a phone call as it costs from the corner drug store. And this will continue to be true. But what has been burning up the customers is the surcharge for toll line calls. If they planned talking over the long distance, they found it necessary to get help from some financing corporation.

The charge on long-distance calls was an additional 10 cents for calls up to 50 cents, and an additional 25 cents to $2 for calls running higher. When a hotel guest who did much telephoning got his bill, it looked like a statement of the Government deficit.

Hotels spent vast sums to create good will and then made the guests sore as pups by socking 'em on their telephone calls. Apartment-hotel directors blew in lots of money advertising homelike apartments and then made the tenants feel as if they in a den of extortionists by the high phone charges.

If it is fair to charge a hotel guest or an apartment tenant a half dollar for a 30-cent call, why not put in a water meter and charge him for his key to the room?

The hotel men have their side. They claim the telephone company socks 'em so much for installing the exchange board, etc., that they lose money on the phone service at best. However, after September 1, by order of the public service commission, lower rates in New York must be put in force. After that date a phone in the room won't seem like a financial hazard.

Of course, this is just a New York ruling, but the rest of the country is apt to get the idea.

All of which will be pretty nice. In all this talk of a broader life it will seem swell to be able to telephone from a hotel and remain solvent.

Cinema Note

If Wyatt Earp, famous frontier town sheriff, were alive, there would be at least two new graves over on Boot Hill. Sam Hellman would be in one and Allan Dwan in the other. Mr. Hellman is the author and Mr. Dwan is the director of "Frontier Marshal," a screen play about Mr. Earp, and what they have done to him, to his career and to his friend, Doc Holliday, is grounds for gunplay.

The screen play is based on Stuart Lake's great story of Wyatt Earp's career as the sheriff in several Western frontier towns. Every chapter of this book was a realistic thriller and we have been waiting for a screen presentation. Well, we've seen it and you'd never know the boys. One of the epic battles of the Old West was that fought between Sheriff Earp and three or four companions, including Doc Holliday, against a gang of outlaws in the Okay Corral. Every move in it was given by Mr. Lake, and the scene was a natural for the screen. But in "Frontier Marshal" it's just another cowboy fight. The sheriff, foolhardy, childish and absurd, goes alone to the corral and mops up the whole gang in as incredible a scene as Hollywood ever turned out. And Doc Holliday dies before the battle is even discussed. Get up, Sheriff! Get up out of that grave, Doc. That's some shootin' to be done!

Cagney and Raft Make Two Dynamite 'Jailbirds'

'Each Dawn I Die' Affords Them Unique Roles; Warners Hold 'Convention' Here Today; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

ANYONE WHO HAS THOUGHT that no new twist could be given the plot of a prison melodrama has only to view the Warner Brothers production of "Each Dawn I Die," next attraction at the Earle Theater, to find out how wrong he has been.

BELL

With James Cagney and George Raft teamed for the first time in it, this subject begins where other prison melodramas have left off and possesses the further virtues of immunity from propaganda and a complete disinclination to glorify crime. To be sure, if an automobile had backfired as the drama desks left the projection room, after the preview screening yesterday afternoon, they probably all would have dropped dead in their tracks, but that was only because the picture ends with an attempted prison break that is quelled with .38's, rifle fire, machine guns and hand grenades. It is a little like watching the Battle of the Marne from a front-row seat.

Cagney and Raft—not to review the picture in advance of its public showing—are cast as a couple of young fellows who began life as underprivileged slum children. One grew up to combat crime as a newspaper reporter; the other to promote it as a gangster of the most vicious type. Both land in the penitentiary at the same time, but for vastly different reasons. From the reporter, the hoodlum learns that there is such a thing in the world as a "square-shooter;" from the hoodlum the reporter learns—or thinks for a time that he does—that there is no such thing as justice and that he might as well be the toughest guy "in stir" as the best behaved, for all the good it will do him. The thing develops into one of the most intensely gripping tales of its kind ever filmed; thanks first to Norman Reilly Raine and Warren Duff for an uncommonly fine script and, secondly, to the good uses to which it has been put by the Warner Brothers.

It is not easy sailing for Jimmy Cagney and George Raft to "steal" this picture away from their associates in one of the best casts of recent vintage. Never mind now what they do, but Jane Bryan, George Bancroft, Stanley Ridges, Alan Baxter, Victor Jory, John Wray, Edward Pawley, Willard Robertson, Emma Dunn, Paul Hurst, Louis Jean Heydt, Joe Downing, Thurston Hall, William Davidson, Clay Clement and Charles Trowbridge do their stints exceedingly well. Some of those stints, by the way, are pretty grim business.

Incidentally, if you look it over, that is a pretty ne plus ultra cast for this sort of thing. You'll find out.

As "Each Dawn I Die" unreels itself, it is inevitable that one who has seen both should recall "They All Come Out." In the film dedicated to the U. S. Department of Justice, some of our penal institutions were made to seem like pretty nice places, after all. "Each Dawn I Die" is its direct antithesis. Its prison, however, is not officially named and probably was built right there on the Warner lot, although it looks more real than that.

So now it comes out. Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland will arrive here tomorrow morning at 8:50 o'clock for their one busy day in the National Capital before proceeding to New York for the Broadway premiere of "The Wizard of Oz." An official tinge will be given their reception at Union Station by the presence of Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and other representatives of the District government, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of the Metropolitan Police and head of the Metropolitan Boys Clubs and numerous others of rank.

With four stage appearances scheduled for Loew's Capitol Theater, the visiting junior stars of the M-G-M lot will not have too much time for social going-on, but Eastern Division Manager Carter Barron, of Loew's, Inc., has managed to squeeze in a luncheon-reception at the Willard Hotel at 1 in honor of his youthful visitors. For this occasion all of Loew's managers in the Eastern Division are being called into Washington. It should be worth it.

Sixteen resident dancers have been added to the roster of those who will take part in the seventh annual "Going Native" revue, scheduled for Loew's Capitol Theater the week of August 18. They are Mary Jane Zernia, Evelyn Clements, Peggy Owens, Irene Morgan, Elinor Flagg, Ann Claxton, Miriam Lyons, Helen Terry, Elizabeth Orr, Vera Sturaile, Jackie Embrey, "Babs" Bright, June Ray, Jeanette Margolis, Catherine De Thierry and Georgia Tanner. Five of the group were members of last year's "line" and so will be able, more or less, to coach the newcomers. Every little bit helps, as Producer Gene Ford probably would say. Chorus rehearsals will begin immediately in the Bamboo Room at the Willard.

Reverting to the matter of visiting managers, John J. Payette, general zone manager for the Warner Brothers in the Washington territory, will hold his annual "sales convention" with all managers under his jurisdiction at the Mayflower Hotel today to discuss the new year's product to be exhibited in the Warner houses. Alll managers from in and out of town will attend.

The "delegates" will be addressed by Robert Smeltzer, district manager for Warner Brothers Pictures, and Frank La Lalce, publicity director, on the product of other producing companies. Other talks will be made by George A. Crouch, assistant zone manager; Guy Wonders, Maryland district manager; Nat Glasser, Virginia district manager; A. Julian Brylawski, in charge of real estate; C. E. McGowan, contact manager; Louis Ribnitski, broker, and J. Alton Pratt and Walter Pettus, in charge of projection and sound, respectively.

Following the business session today, the entire personnel will enjoy a day's outing at Annapolis Roads, Md., tomorrow, at which all Washington film exchange managers also will be guests of Mr. Payette.

That new issue of the March of Time, "Metropolis—1939," concerning which we have had words to say here off and on, will be included in the bill featuring Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer in "When Tomorrow Comes," next at RKO-Keith's Theater. Just when that will be nobody knows, including Manager Hardie Meakin, Ginger Rogers and David Niven are doing so well in "Bachelor Mother." "When Tomorrow Comes" is the picture that was known first as "Give Us This Night." So they gave them that night and they used it to change the title!

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

BILLY ROSE seated himself in Lindy's, and called the waiter by singing: "Waiter, waiter, waiter, your tip will be much greater—if you bring me a bee-yoo-tee-ful girl." "Where's that from?" Rose was asked. "From any Eddie Cantor picture," he informed . . . Mayor LaGuardia is on a diet. The doctors have advised him that he may eat anything, except spaghetti . . . One elevator trip to the Rainbow Room, on the sixty-fifth floor, costs the Rockefellers exactly 14 cents, in electricity consumed . . . Al Lackey, husband of Sophie Tucker, didn't bet on the horse, Sophie Tucker, which won at Santa Anita. "I haven't made a nickel out of Sophie in 16 years," Lackey explained, "and I'm not starting now."

W. C. Fields tells this story of a British vaudeville colleague of many years ago—an untalented rhymster who found bookings rare, until the Titanic sank. Then he included in his repertory a song dedicated to the victims . . . The words he allegedly improvised were: "Who stood at attention, 'mid Destiny's fall? The sailors of Britain, the bravest of all . . . Who stood amid icebergs, sang 'God Save the King?' The sailors of Britain, who braved everything" . . . Cheers always followed this rendition, and the rhymster was booked into every theater in England . . . When Fields met him, many years later, he was unemployed . . . "Ahfter all, Bill," he explained, "you cahn't have a Titanic disahster every season."

A FURTIVE gentleman entered the office of Joe Mankiewicz, the producer, and offered to sell him a sable coat for $1,500 . . . "It's priceless. It's worth $30,000," the furtive one spieled. "Just think how beautiful your wife will look in it anywhere she goes" . . . "Can she wear it anywheres?" Mankiewicz asked . . . "Anywheres," the furtive one assured, "except the Ambassador Hotel."

BEATRICE LILLIE isn't anxious to continue her London engagement—and suggested that the cafe management hire Adele Astaire to replace her. The manager asked: "But what can Adele do, that you can't?" Bea answered: "She can bring Fred along" . . . An interviewer rushed to the apartment house where Jack Dempsey lived, told the convalescent champ that an elevator strike may be called in that building, and asked him: "Are you worried?" Jack returned "How did you get up here?" and the reporter informed, "In the elevator." "Then," said Jack, "I'm not worried" . . . Pat Rooney complains that it's been so long since he's worked, he has to watch his imitators now, to see how his dance is done.

JACK BENNY was giving some advice to a new comic, who didn't quite understand . . . "One thing I want to know, Jack," he finally asked. "How do your gag-writers work up such funny jokes" . . . "It's easy," Benny explained. "They lock themselves in a room, start laughing—and then think backwards."

GEORGE JESSEL marched into the Friars Club, and told the startled members "I'm the Prior here." The club's secretary looked up the records, and found that Jessel really was the Prior. Then he looked up the dictionary, to find out what Prior means . . . Charles Laughton is saving all his uncomplimentary reviews, in a folder marked "Funny File" . . . John Barrymore flew to the coast, where he was asked: "Just what is it that's between you and Elaine?" . . . "What's between us?" Barrymore repeated. "Well, just now, it's 3,000 miles."

GEORGE M. COHAN, walking along Forty-sixth street last week, was greeted by an old friend who shouted enthusiastically: "Cohan! The one and only Cohan! The incomparable Cohan!" The star blushed, and started to back up—almost off the sidewalk, where a passing hackie stepped on the brakes, and snarled: "Watch out, you big, blind stiff" . . . Max Reinhardt has expressed some interest in signing Jimmy Savo, the pantomimist, to appear in a Shakespearean production. "You appeared in 'The Boys From Syracuse,'" Reinhardt told him, "but have you any other experience in Shakespeare?" . . . "It's right up my alley," Savo replied. "Get this—'Thou must payest me more shekels.'"

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Aug. 7.—Just as I suspected, Norma Shearer was scarcely outside saluting distance of the Statue of Liberty when romantic rumors with George Raft reared up. Why shouldn't he like her? George is on his way for an appearance in London with his picture "Each Dawn I Die."

HOPPER

Now I'm waiting for a daily bulletin from abroad that Norma was seen with Lord or Prince So-and-so, which will be a natural. Because she's one of the most eligible girls who ever went abroad, what with beauty, talent, money, position and loneliness. And with the added advantage of being able to get anybody she likes on the screen.

All the broken-down, flatfooted noblemen from London to Cairo are standing in line. With plenty of alleged American friends standing by urging them on. I don't believe she'll fall for any of that. She's always had her head screwed on the right way. Her sister said: "If you come back a countess, I'll disown you."

Barbara Hutton's father told me his child would have married a title at 18 if she hadn't made him a promise not to marry until he had met the gentleman. (He hasn't been able to do much about it since.) The deal was all cooked up by a well-known American and her beautiful palace in Rome was to be part of the deal.

I'm a peace loving woman, but even so, I'm sick of seeing Harry Bridges' face on every front page. So why not give him over to the legion and police he so despises? And let them try gentleness, but give us a rest. Wouldn't you rather see a bathing beauty?

Wonder why Sally Eilers, who has a baby, lovely home, and swell husband goes back East to play summer stock and angles for a radio job? Believe me, if Harry Joe Brown belonged to me, I wouldn't leave him.

Louis Bromfield swapped the Garden of Allah for his silo in Mansfield, Ohio. He'll fill it with corn, not Brigham Young's wives, before his return.

Sam Wood, who directed "Good Bye, Mr. Chips" has the undying devotion of all the boys who work with him. Sam, who has two daughters, but no son, is now very much concerned over Ramsey Innesman, a 12-year-old lad who's in the King's Hospital. He telephoned him the other day, told him to get well quickly, and he'd bring him on to Hollywood for a visit. Can't you just see all of Mr. Chips' boys putting themselves into a hospital for a trip to America?

In Mary Martin Paramount got the best chassis it has had since Marlene Dietrich. So what? They'll cover it with a bustle in "Victor Herbert."

Victor Hugo was so crowded the other night you couldn't have squeezed in another person. But a man came along and promised Benny Goodman a hot seat at his table if he could have one that night. He was Jimmie Johnson, warden at Alcatraz!

Was it coincidence or a sense of humor that Barbara Stanwyck's first picture since her marriage is "Remember the Night." While husband, Bob is doing "Remember."

Bob isn't superstitious, but his wardrobe man is. Bob has to wear 13 suits of clothes in this picture, and his man sewed a rabbit's foot in tail of each coat!

The Gene Markey's didn't give that scheduled party after preview of "Lady of the Tropics." Hedy said the strain would be too great on Gene who was just out of the hospital. That isn't what I heard.

Wonder why certain writers think so highly of Garbo's feet that they write about them day after day? Is it because they never go higher than a heel?

New Step Is Taken to Aid Film Realism

Village of Real Buildings Erected in Week for Muni

By Frederick C. Othman

United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Hollywood, Aug. 7 (U.P.) — The brothers Warner called in Carl Jules Weyl, their art director, the other day, and told him they wanted him to build an English village, complete, under the cavernous roof of stage 18.

"And by the way," they said, "we want it finished in a week."

They got what they wanted. It cost 'em $40,000.

The village of Calderbury, thus, was in use today when we arrived for a chat with Weyl, distinguished architect who turned movie art director when millionaires stopped building mansions. In production was "We Are Not Alone," with the young surgeon, Paul Muni, playing the violin for Miss Dolly Haas, his beloved. He wasn't doing a very good job of it, either. Director Edmund Goulding had a musician on hand to coach him.

More than 100 extras sat quiet, while Muni practiced his fiddle playing and Weyl led us on an inspection tour of his week-old village. It was complete, with cobbled streets, gabled roofs, newspaper office, book store, antique shop, pub with beer spouts that worked, houses, and German bakery. When England declared war—the time was 1914—a mob threw a brick through the widow of the bake shop.

Glass Instead of Taffy

"It's a real glass window, too," Weyl said. "Always in the past, the movies have used rock candy sheets for glass, but it doesn't tinkle properly when it breaks."

"Neither does it gash any juglar veins," we reminded him.

"Nor does our real glass," Weyl retorted. "I mounted it so that when smashed it collapses right where it is. And furthermore we smashed enough glass to glaze a whole house, making tests to prove it wouldn't fly in anybody's face."

But that's only a minor matter. The revolutionary thing that Weyl has done is build a real, workable city.

Since Hollywood began, it has been building fake towns, with false fronts for exterior shots. Then it has built the interiors on a stage miles away. Thus no shot taken inside a living room, for instance, ever has shown any action through the window. There never has been anything outside that window except a piece of painted canvas and maybe a limb from a tree.

All Buildings Real

In this picture all the buildings were real. They actually had furnishings inside. The newspaper office had a press, the took store had books and the bakery bread, while the doc's house was complete, even to a grand piano.

The result was that the camera shooting the violin scene, for instance, caught actual passers-by on the street outside and a glimpse of the lads entering the pub. This seems to be a small improvement in the technique of picture making, maybe, but every such step makes for that much more realism.

Main difficulty is that the building of such sets is tremendously expensive; the quickies will continue to have sheets hung up outside drawing room windows for many a year to come. Other trouble is that such scenes are tremendously difficult to light.

Tony Still Jittery

Tony Gaudio, the cameraman who holds the world's record of photographing more than 1,000 movies, still was jittery from an experience of yesterday.

"I had to catch people walking down the street and into doors and I had to follow them with the camera boom," he reported. "So what happened? We didn't have any sun over head. All we had was a roof to shut it out and about 400 spotlights and 60 electricians, and no matter what we'd do, the shadow of the camera boom would get in the picture. I got so mad that I threw my pipe out of my mouth and threw it on the ground. It broke. And then I realized it was the best pipe I ever owned. Eddie Robinson gave it to me. Then I was mad.

"If anybody had said anything to me then I believe—yes, I really believe—I would have committed a crime."

DonatPlays Romeo On English Stage

Robert Donat will next be seen as Romeo in "Romeo and Juliet," but not on the screen.

Given his pick of Shakespearean roles for his coming appearances at the Old Vic, famous English repertory theater, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star selected Shakespeare's memorable romance of the Montagues and the Capulets.

Donat, who is currently starring in "Good-by, Mr. Chips," will return to the screen later in "Ruined City," adapted from the Neville Shute novel, "Kindling."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Aug. 7 (INS).—The bidding battle of last week centered around Somerset Maugham's soon to be published novelette, "The Vills on the Hill," based on one of his short stories. Warners saw it for Bette Davis and M-G-M was equally eager to nab it for Greer Garson, for it has a great woman's role. Naturally, as soon as the bidding started, the price soared sky-high, with Warners finally paying $30,000 for the film rights, a record price for an unpublished novelette.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Heaven knows when Bette will do it—she has so many other stories lined up for her—out last year she made more pictures than any other top actress. Warners can not see any woman's story without wanting it for La Davis, but since Miriam Hopkins the performance in "The Old Maid," they are dividing some of their cherished plays, "All This and Heaven, Too," for example.

An English court will be asked to decide within the next three weeks whether Robert Donat broke his contract with Edward Small or whether he had a right to make "The Citadel." If the court finds in favor of Small, large damages will be asked both from the actor and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Small claims he had a definite contract with the English actor following the "Count of Monte Cristo," the first picture Donat made for an American company. Slaughter & May, of London, are representing the Small company and depositions are already in their hands. Warners also claimed a prior right to the young man's services.

John Considine, jr., who came through with plans to produce "Boys Town," an M-G-M moneymaker, has sold his bosses on another idea. This time, John sees in the life of Mrs. Leland Stanford an entertaining movie, especially with Greer Garson playing Mrs. Stanford (sounds to me like the "Mrs. Chips" influence). Permission must first be obtained from Stanford University, the school founded in memory of Leland Stanford, jr., who died in Italy when he was very young. His collection of antiques is part of the museum at the university. This collection is always of interest to those who know the story of Mrs. Stanford's efforts to have the university rebuilt after her husband's death, when it was destroyed by an earthquake.

You should get Claudette Colbert to tell you about her experiences on location with "Drums Along the Mohawk." The stove pipe in her tent broke one night and when she woke up in the morning, she was as black as Aunt Jemima. Next thing, the water in the tank ran out and there weren't any more baths for La Colbert. But for all that, Claudette returned with nothing but praise for John Ford, who, she says, is one of the finest directors she has ever had on a picture. Surprising that these two hit it off so well, for John has always directed he-man stuff and the women usually feel he gives the gents the best of it.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Helen Hayes and Charles MacArthur went straight from Charlie Chaplin's house to the airport Sunday, where they planed back East. Charlie had a tennis tea in their honor with Lillian Gish, the Aldous Huxleys, A. C. Blumenthal, Peggy Fears, Constance Collier, Helen Vinson, Fred Perry, the David Selznicks and the Ashton Stevenses as his other guests; Alex D'Arcy and Arleen Whelan had a narrow escape when the car they were in overturned on their way to Binnie Barnes' weenie bake; Greta Garbo has left the Miramar Hotel and has moved into Omar Kiam's house. She has closed all but two rooms while she is working; the date of the Adrian-Janet Gaynor marriage is August 24 and not the 26th as we said yesterday; Anatole Litvak telephoned Miriam Hopkins and told her of the rumor that she is headed for Reno, which both she and he strongly deny. She returns here in two weeks, delighted over the reviews on her work in "The Old Maid."

Barbara Stanwyck surprised Bob Taylor with a small dinner at Victor Hugos on his birthday. Bob is also a Leo—maybe that's why I like him so well.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Girl Asks How to Decline Married Man's Insistent Invitations; He's an Old Family Friend

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I should like for you to give me some advice on what to tell a married man who has been asking me to go out with him. I have told him time and again that we shouldn't go out together, but he still insists. He says no one need ever know and that there would be no harm in it. He and his wife have been friends of our family for years and I have always liked them very much.

As for going out with him, I have no desire to do so, because I think too much of his wife to hurt her in any way. And also, I value my reputation. What should I say to him the next time he asks me to go out with him? I shall appreciate your prompt suggestions. B. C.

DEAR B. C.: There really is no problem here, except as you choose to magnify one into existence. The truth of the matter, I think, is this: You could have, and would have, almost effortlessly put a quietus on the man's invitations long ago, with no loss of friendship, if you didn't rather enjoy haggling with him over the propriety of his oft-repeated overtures.

Why stall around by saying that you "shouldn't go out together?" Why not put his mind at rest, once and for all, by saying directly, "I am not going out with you, now or ever, for the very good reason that I have no desire to." Once the man gets it through his head that you "have no desire" to go out with him, he will not trouble you again. But so long as you quibble over the proprieties, he will think you are open to argument, with always a chance of his winning out.

If you wish to give him assurance doubly sure that he is barking up the wrong tree in his quest for sly adventure, you might add for good measure: "Not only do I have no desire to go out with you, but I value my reputation too highly to waste it in flirtations with married men; and besides, I am too fond of your wife to hurt her in any way." However the strength of one's stand in a given instance is sometimes weakened by piling one reason on top of another. It smacks of "protesting too much."

If you are inclined to feel flattered by this man's suggestions, you don't know men. When he says that "no one need ever know" you had been out together, he is admitting that his attentions amount to insult. M. H.

Should Girl Go With Beau to Reunion?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: A young man with whom I have been keeping company has asked me to go with him and his mother to North Carolina for a family reunion. I am doubtful as to whether this is the proper thing to do and would be only too glad to have your opinion.

I am 18 years of age and he is 24. We are not engaged, but he claims that he is in love with me and wishes to marry me. As for me, I am not certain about marrying him, but if things work out as I hope, I may. About this reunion: I forgot to mention that we would be gone for a week, and that we would stay at the home of one of his relatives. Please advise me soon. DOUBTFUL.

Invitation Should Come From His Mother

DEAR DOUBTFUL: It would be proper for you to go with the young man and his mother to their family reunion only if the young man's mother expressly invites you. If his heart is set on your going, he should have his mother write you a note or telephone you, asking you to go as her guest. If he or she fails to do this, you should not go.

You simply cannot run the risk of pushing yourself into the picture, possibly against the mother's wishes; because if she doesn't approve of your joining the party, the chances are that you wouldn't be welcome at the home of his relatives in North Carolina, either. Tell the young man you wouldn't dream of going, unless and until his mother asks you, and has made sure that the folks "back home" are ready to receive you. M. H.

Anti-Limp Recipe From Bette Davis

No alluring lady of the ballroom should have sore muscles. The girl who takes exercise only now and then may find herself limping a waltz.

Bette Davis offers a solution. She first used it to relieve "corset-stiffness" while working in a film and found it just as efficacious after an occasional horseback ride. The remedy is a 15-minute bath in very hot water in which a package of bicarbonate of soda has been dissolved.

Back to School Suit

Green Turtle Soup, Says G-Man, J. Edgar Hoover

By Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor.

WHEN G-MAN NO. 1 is not busy catching up with public enemies, acting as godfather at a christening, or being host to lads of the country who think he is "tops," he is often seen dining at his favorite restaurants.

Mr. Hoover

There's a theory that gourmets are almost always great men—and vice versa. Such a supposition is quite in tune with J. Edgar Hoover. There wasn't any hesitancy in answering when I asked Mr. Hoover for the foods on his preferred list. His choice is as American as his activities. Turtle soup, sirloin steak and turnip greens, clams and iced tea are his "hankerin's."

If you can catch your turtle, want to make soup to the G-Man's taste, and win laurels for serving this popular bachelor's choice, try the following recipe.

Green Turtle Soup

Put 1 quart of brown stock in a saucepan, add the liquid from cooking the turtle, 2 egg whites slightly beaten and ½ lemon rind cut in thin strips. Bring to the boiling point, stirring constantly. Let simmer for 5 minutes and set in a warm place to settle. Strain through a wet napkin. Just before serving, add 1 pound of green turtle meat cut in small cubes. Reheat, without boiling. Add 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper and ¼ cup sherry. Makes 1¼ quarts.

Don't be discouraged if you can't find a turtle, for there is soup delicious with the sweetness of green turtle meat to be had at your grocery. And it is complete with sherry, too.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Aug. 7.

ONE OF THE most interesting and attractive American women of our generation has been having several days in the sun here of late, and every New Yorker who has been near her during her rather startling reappearance in the spotlight has been the richer for it. I mean that slender sprite named Irene Foote who lived in one of our suburbs, and then married a slim young second comedian named Vernon Castle.

Now, as Irene Castle McLaughlin, of Chicago, she and her daughter, Barbara, have been here—and Irene is still the wasp-waisted sheaf of grace that she was in the pre-war days, when she and Castle invented, to all intents, the American ballroom dance and made its many variations an international craze.

I have it on the best authority that today, past 40, she barely jiggles the beam at 114, or only 3 pounds more than when she and her first husband were making dance history. Which is pretty good for a girl who bore three children before she was 30—in addition to helping mold the folkways of the western world.

Mrs. McLaughlin says she has never fretted about poundage; perhaps because she believes the dawdling rite of luncheon is a waste of time. She danced (in a professional manner) at our Fair for the first time in years. Then she was off to do two Noel Coward playlets at a straw-hat theater in New Jersey. And she admits that all this activity has kept her pretty flustered and unstrung. When it's over she's going back to Chicago with Barbara and relax.

You don't have to know Irene Castle's identity to mark and exclaim over her beauty, grace and distinction when she is dancing at a supper club just for the fun of it. The onlooker is aware in a very few minutes that is beholding somebody very exceptional. And he is doggone well right, too.

Bigger and Better Reform

Gov. Luren D. Dickinson of Michigan is right about New York "sin," Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey declared yesterday at her weekly press conference.

Mrs. DeGoofey

The founder and president of the Do Something About It League announced she would offer the Governor the full co-operation of her organization in a Nation-wide effort to reform everybody who ought to be reformed.

"Naturally, I rejoiced in any offensive against 'sin,'" declared the intrepid crusader, "but I do not think the clean-up should stop with wine, women and song. Gov. Dickinson, I understand, denounced the drinking and dancing he saw in New York. Now, I expect to go much further. I hope to enlist the forces of the Nation in weeding out all irritating people and things generally. For instance, I don't think the nude dancers in New York——"

To Track Vice In Its Haunts

"That I don't know—as yet. But I am leaving tonight to make a personal investigation. However, as I was saying, I don't think the dancers or the drinkers or the cigarette smokers are nearly the menace to the peace of the average person as are—well, say, any of the following:

"The next-door busy-body who drives you to a 'glass-house' existence.

"Motorists who give insulting honks to pedestrians who are acting wholly within their rights.

"Persons who make scenes in restaurants, who bawl out telephone operators, who behave like jungle inhabitants on street cars and buses, who won't take their turns in line at ticket windows, who open mail, eavesdrop, carry tales, turn radios on full blast, who are rude to their inferiors, servile to their betters, who insist on stumbling over everyone's feet to reach their seats at a theater after the curtain has gone up—well in fact all selfish, disagreeable, rude, inconsiderate, pain-in-the-neck people of all kinds."

"But Mrs. DeGoofey, won't such a project be a colossal undertaking?" asked an editorial writer.

"It should not be difficult. These offenders are widely known to everybody. Anyway, the Do Something About It League has established a downtown registry at which names of all persons needing to be reformed are being turned in."

Blacklist Being Compiled

"Have any names been proposed for action yet?" asked a gossip columnist.

"Yes we have received a good many, including a large representation of social bores who talk entirely about themselves, and of 'wise guys' of both sexes who know everything. Then we also have persons listed with a variety of offenses—quarrelsomeness, temper tantrums, gluttony, bigotry, cattiness, labor exploitation, self-righteousness—oh, all the sins commonly listed in the scriptures, but which strangely enough have been neglected by reformers up to now."

"What will be your method of dealing with these offenders once you have apprehended them," asked a police reporter.

"Our plan is to segregate them in groups and let them fight it out among themselves. We also hope to promote marriages among those of like character so that the peace of other persons will not be upset."

"Mrs. DeGoofey will your reform extend to all classes of people?" asked a society reporter.

"Yes, indeed. In fact, we may even reform some of our reformers."

"No!" exclaimed the press.

"Yes! I hope eventually to get around to that. In fact I may even reform myself. You know I think it may be entirely possible that I may have a few little idiosyncrasies myself—of course though of a very minor nature."

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Joe DiMaggio's Fiancee, Dorothy Arnold, Once Was Captain of a Baseball Team

IF YOU'RE A baseball fan—I am—you've probably wondered what kind of girl the famous Joe DiMaggio is marrying. Since "opposites attract" and the beautiful Dorothy Arnold is a film actress, I had my doubts. If he had picked one of those glamor girls who just sit around and look pretty, I was ready to wash my hands of the interview!

But it's all right! Miss Arnold used to be captain of the baseball team back in Duluth! Now, when she isn't being glamorous for the camera, she shoots golf in the 80's, does championship swimming and plays a walloping game of tennis that leaves her antagonist exhausted if not defeated. Any glamor girl can get to know athletes—Miss Arnold knows her athletics!

All this energy dates from the time when she entertained ideas of becoming a physical education director. She weighed a husky 138 pounds (once it went up to 143!) and was busily teaching ballet and tap dancing and giving swimming instruction on the side. But how can a girl keep her mind on physical education, when she has a chance to become a movie star?

Attracted Attention

So when Miss Arnold's honey-blonde hair and amazing blue eyes attracted the serious attention of the Hollywood powers, she co-operated by trimming her weight right down. In fact, she was almost too obliging. She slimmed down to a mere shadow of her former healthy self, and felt perfectly miserable!

As she tells it: "I lost all my pep, had to sleep at least 10 hours a night, and, at that, was always whipped down at the end of a day. Until then I'd never known what it was to be tired! I made up my mind that a girl needed a little weight along with glamour, and now I'm up to 118 pounds."

All she does in the way of a diet is to cut out sweets and restrict herself to fruit for dessert. She has quit stringing along with a sandwich here and a salad there and gets her three meals regularly. Having got her pep back, she has gone back to tennis, golf and swimming for diversion. Whether you believe it or not, she has a few calisthenics and does them.

Has 24-inch Waist

She especially likes the stretch-bend type in which you see how high you can stretch the arms overhead, then how far sideward you can bend. She has a 24-inch waist, 34-inch bust, 35½-inch hips. She studied dancing as a child, and it seems to be an unbroken rule that the girls who dance while growing up have beautiful legs. Her calf measures 13½ inches, her thigh, 19¾ inches.

This is not the exact order of the interview—but, rather, the substance of it. At some point, Joe DiMaggio's name came into the conversation and that ended the beauty talk. I gather that Joe is 6 feet 2, and that he has the most wonderful brown eyes. I hope he plays a good game of golf!

Lieut. C. L. Banks to Wed Miss Elizabeth Moses

By Elizabeth Hennecy

There's something about a Marine—definitely. And there seems to be some enchantment about the Marine Corps that draws marine daughters back to that service when they marry. Twice in a very brief space of weeks have the daughters of prominent Marine officers decided to wed "In the Corps."

Hardly have the bells stopped ringing for the ceremonies and festivities attending the wedding of Miss Margaret Jeschke to Lieut. John Sherman Oldfield of the Marine Corps, when the word comes that Miss Elizabeth Angier Moses, daughter of Brig. Gen. Emile Phillips Moses, United States Marine Corps, and Mrs. Moses, of Quantico, will soon be married to Lieut. Charles Louis Banks, also of the Marine Corps.

This latter wedding will not take place in town, but it will draw several young Washington lassies to Quantico as bridesmaids and many Washingtonians will be guests for the ceremony.

Though the engagement was but recently announced and the wedding will take place on Saturday, already Miss Moses' schedule is becoming more and more crowded with parties being given in her honor.

Many Parties Slated In Honor of Bride

This afternoon Mrs. Reginald H. Ridgley, wife of Capt. Rigdley, will entertain at a shower tea at their quarters in Quantico in honor of Miss Moses. Assisting Mrs. Ridgley during the afternoon will be Mrs. Lemuel C. Shepherd, wife of Col. Shepherd, and Mrs. Frank Wirsig, wife of Capt. Wirsig.

Among the guests will be several Washingtonians, including Mrs. James Underhill, her daughter, Miss Barbara Underhill, who will be one of the bridesmaids, and Mrs. Underhill's niece, Miss Leslie Lockwood.

Also among the guests will be Mrs. R. P. Williams, wife of Brig. Gen. Williams, Mrs. David L. S. Brewster, wife of Col. Brewster; Mrs. Arthur D Challacombe, Mrs. Field Harris, Mrs. A. H. Noble and Mrs. Samuel L. Howard, wife of Col. Howard and mother of Miss Mary Howard, who will be another of the bridesmaids. Col. and Mrs. Howard, now stationed in Quantico, were until recently stationed in Washington.

Couple Will Motor To Fort Sill Post

On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Challacombe, wife of Maj. Challacombe, will entertain for the bridal party in their quarters at a cocktail party, and on Friday the father and mother of the bride will entertain at a similar party at their quarters following the wedding rehearsal. The wedding itself will be in the historic Aquia Church at Stafford, Va.

With her wedding gown and to hold her veil the bride will wear fresh orange blossoms flown especially from the garden of her grandfather, Will Angier, at Point Loma, near San Diego, Calif. Her lace veil will be a wedding gift brought from Brussels by Mrs. Philip Barker.

Lieut. Banks, who is a graduate of the Virginia Military Institute, has been until recently stationed at San Diego. He and his bride will motor to Fort Sill, Okla., for his new station, where he will be a student at the Field Artillery School.

Grace Notes: Speaking of the Marines: Lieut. Col. Richard H. Jeschke and Mrs. Jeschke will be leaving Washington soon. They are slated to go to Parris Island, S. C., where Col. Jeschke will be chief of staff to Maj. Gen. Breckinridge. In the meantime, they will be off for a vacation at Cape May and Virginia Beach . . . More heartthrobs for the debutantes. The new Second Secretary of the Polish Legation, who will replace Michal Budny, is Count Antoni Tarnowski, of an old family very prominent in the history of Poland . . . And, so rumor has it, he is a bachelor, young, good looking, very gay and brilliant, dances beautifully and loves parties.

Miss Walson To Be Wed

Miss Elizabeth Walson, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Charles Moore Walson, has selected Wednesday, August 23, as the date for her wedding to Lieut. George Willard Bixby, U. S. A., son of Mr. and Mrs. eGorge Frank Bixby, of this city.

The ceremony will be held in the Walter Reed Memorial Chapel with Chaplain Alfred C. Oliver, jr., officiating at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Richard Maurer, of Philadelphia, will be best man. Ushers will include Lieut. E. C. Stann, Lieut. John R. Jannarone, Lieut. Rollie N. Blancette, Lieut. Charles S. Schweizer and Lieut. Frank W. Govern.

Miss Ruth Groff Becomes Bride Of Mr. Hogue

Rites Performed At Metropolitan Memorial Church

In a ceremony at the Metropolitan Memorial Church yesterday afternoon, Miss Ruth Orville Groff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Diller F. Groff, of Chevy Chase, became the bride of Walter J. Hogue, son of Mrs. Walter J. Hogue, of Hanover, Ind.

Palms, ferns and white blooms adorned the church for the ceremony at which the Rev. J. Phelps Hand, of Baltimore, officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a sea green traveling ensemble. Her tiny hat was of white kid as were her accessories and she had a cluster of orchids on her shoulder.

Mrs. Paul A. Humiston, of Marshall, Mich., was matron of honor for her sister. Her informal gown was of king's blue and she wore accessories of black. Her corsage was of tea roses.

Dr. Arthur R. Hogue, of Hanover, Ind., brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The bride's twin brother, George F. Groff, of New York City, was an usher as were Raymond L. Mestrezat, of Passaic, N. J.; R. Hilton Gore, of this city, and James Stanley, of Philadelphia.

Following the ceremony there was an informal reception for the two families at the home of the bride's parents on Ingomar street. Mrs. Groff, who assisted the young couple in receiving, wore a navy blue lace gown and matching accessories. She wore a cluster of gardenias. Mrs. Hogue had chosen a black chiffon frock for the occasion. Her corsage also was of gardenias.

After a motor trip Mr. and Mrs. Hogue will make their home in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Miss Tweed Is Betrothed

Of wide interest here is the announcement of the engagement of Miss Katharine W. Tweed, daughter of Countess Eleanor Palffy, of Boston and Paris, and Harrison Tweed, of New York, to Archibald B. Roosevelt, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald B. Roosevelt, of Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, and grandson of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, of Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay, and President Roosevelt.

The prospective bride attended Milton Academy in Massachusetts. At present she is a student of Sarah Lawrence College in Bronxville, N. Y. Mr. Roosevelt was graduated from Groton in 1936. He finished Harvard College this year magna cum laude and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He also won a Rhodes scholarship from Massachusettts.

Mr. Roosevelt is the nephew of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, of this city; Mrs. Richard Derby and Col. Theodore Roosevelt, jr., of Oyster Bay.

The bride-to-be is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tweed, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. William G. Roelker, of Providence, R. I. She is the great-granddaughter of William M. Evarts, once United States Senator from New York.

Lieut. and Mrs. Clement R. Criddle and their young son, Bobbie, will leave their home in Arlington, Va., on Saturday for a motor trip to Oregon, Wis., where they will visit Lieut. Criddle's mother, Mrs. Arthur Criddle.

The Criddles' first stop will be Pittsburgh, where they will be the guests of Lieut. and Mrs. R. L. Adams. They will return to Arlington after Labor Day.

Mrs. W. M. Peele, who makes her home with her son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. and Mrs. Criddle, has left for a month's visit to her home in Goldsboro, N. C., and to Elizabeth City, N. C., where she will visit her son and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Braxton Peele.

Jean M. Howard To Be Wed Aug. 16

From Oshawa, Ontario, comes the announcement of the engagement of Miss Jean Munro Howard, daughter of Mrs. Johnston Carson Neithercut, to Charles Clifford Crider, of Takoma Park, son of Mrs. Henry Aristo Crider, of Vienna, Va.

The wedding will take place in the chapel of the Oshawa Missionary College August 16 at 8:30 o'clock. The Rev. Malcomb N. Campbell, of Takoma Park, will officiate and his daughter, Miss Laura Campbell, will be the maid of honor.

The prospective bridegroom will have as best man his brother, Frank Norwood Crider, of Takoma Park.

Following their honeymoon they will make their home in Takoma Park where Mr. Crider is a senior theological student in Washington Missionary College.

Virginia Mae Bauserman Becomes Bride at Mount Vernon Place Church

Now on their honeymoon trip to Atlantic City, the Northeastern States and Niagara Falls, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Harlan Moran, whose wedding took place on Saturday, will make their home at 931 Shepherd street, Washington.

The former Miss Virginia Mae Bausermanfi daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Earl Bauserman, of Woodstock, Va., and Mr. Moran, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Thomas Moran, of Washington and Peoria, Ill., were married at the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church. The Rev. William Andrew Keese, pastor of the Metropolitan Methodist Church, officiated at the 4 o'clock ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white lace gown over satin, fashioned with short puffed sleeves, sweetheart neckline and full skirt. Her floor-length veil was held to her hair by a cluster of orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of Bermuda lilies. Her only ornament was a mother of pearl locket.

Miss Genevieve Bauserman, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a gown of peach net, fashioned with short puffed sleeves, square neckline and a full skirt with three tiers of aqua ribbon. She wore a large horsehair picture hat of aquamarine shade and carried a sheaf of gladioli.

James Grant was the best man and the ushers were Gleen Rondabush, a fraternity brother of the bridegroom, and Donald Onyun, cousin of the bridegroom.

When the couple left for their wedding trip the bride was wearing a gold linen frock with a brown jacket, brown felt hat and accessories to match.

The former Miss Bauserman was salutatorian of her class when she was graduated from the Woodstock High School. Mr. Moran was graduated from Central High School and is attending George Washington University.

Broader Tax Base Studied By House Unit

Closing Gap Between Income and Expense Urged on Committee

A movement for narrowing at the next session of Congress the huge gap between Government income and expense arose yesterday in the House Ways and Means subcommittee on tax legislation.

The Democratic members of the subcommittee—Buck, of California, and McCormack, of Massachusetts—wanted to let the taxpayer know that he might as well start paying the bill if Government spending is to continue at the present pace.

The subcommittee will reconvene here November 1, Buck said, to work out a bill overhauling Federal tax laws for consideration when Congress meets in January.

Buck Visits Roosevelt

Buck called at the White House yesterday and suggested to President Roosevelt that he inform the subcommittee, when it resumes work in November, whether the Government will need any extra money for the fiscal year beginning next July 1.

He said he came away with the impression the President would do this, although no commitment was made. Any figures the President might submit to the subcommittee would represent Budget Bureau estimates, which will be prepared late this fall and sent to Congress in January.

Buck said the group would seriously consider broadening the income tax base by lowering exemptions, and raising the normal tax rate. If exemptions for married persons were reduced from $2,500 to $2,000, and for single persons from $1,000 to $800, he declared, Government revenues would be increased $135,000,000.

Doubts Action in 1940

He admitted it was doubtful whether anything along this line would be done "in a political year like 1940," but added:

"If the Government departments and agencies—which, in the final analysis, means the public—are going to continue demanding as much money as they have been doing, it is time for everybody to realize the bill must be paid. We cannot continue indefinitely to run up heavy deficits."

In his opinion, it is "highly important" for the subcommittee, in rewriting tax laws, to know approximately how much money will be needed.

Balanced Budget Urged

McCormack said that, in his opinion "We have got to make a really determined effort to balance the budget in the near future." He added:

"The Government must face the realities of the situation. We cannot continue to have large deficits in the future as we have in the past."

He said he was in favor of increasing taxes to help reduce the difference between income and outgo. One essential way to bring in more revenue, he believes, is lowered exemptions.

150 Studying Marine Designing at G. W. U. To Inspect Newport News Shipyard Friday

Dr. Arthur F. Johnson, instructor, lectures to the new class in "Naval Architecture and Marine Engineering," at George Washington University. Demands for ship designers and inspectors under the Maritime Commission's new construction program has created the class

Because of the demand for ship designers and inspectors created by the Maritime Commission's vast construction program, 150 men and a woman are meeting daily at George Washington University to delve in to the problem of "Naval Architecture and Marine Engineering."

Under direction of Dr. Arthur F. Johnson, professor of mechanical engineering, the course uses models, plans and specifications furnished by the Maritime Commission. Dr. Johnson was assistant marine superintendent of the Army Transport Service during the war.

The class has already made a number of visits to shipyards, and Friday a group will leave by boat for Newport News to inspect the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. and the America, now under construction. The following Saturday the students—most of whom are college graduates, engineers or experienced shipyard workers—will visit the Sun Shipbuilding Co. at Chester, Pa.

Classes meet daily, Monday through Thursday, from 5 to 7 p. m. The course includes lectures and problems on modern seagoing steam and Diesel-powered cargo and passenger vessels, covering structure, machinery and equipment; Federal regulation and operating practices; economic factors and technical considerations.

German Generals Reported Called

with a sudden coup abolishing Polish customs control, Poland's principal interest in the Free City.

The Senate's note was said to have included an agreement also to enter negotiations on the troublesome customs issue, at present the nub of difficulties between Danzig Nazis and Poland.

Poles have been complaining of the treatment of her customs officials in the Free City, while Danzigers have charged customs officials were unnecessarily numerous and in some cases, at least, were spying on Danzig defense preparations.

As an upshot of Polish complaints of treatment of customs officials, a ban was placed on some imports of Danzig herring and margarine last week. The Poles said the position of the officials charged with inspecting products for importation had been made untenable. Danzigers replied that Poland was trying to strangle the city economically, and threatened to open the customs frontier with East Prussia, Germany.

The latter threat, if carried out, would have resulted in the virtual incorporation of Danzig into the Reich, so far as trade is concerned.

Friday, Danzig officials warned several Polish customs officials not to report for work after Sunday. Poland immediately protested.

[The United Press gave this summary of the situation:

[The Danzig government said it was willing to discuss the entire question of customs inspectors, but rebuffed the Polish note as "undiplomatic and out of place."

[Danzig insisted a distinction should be made between Polish customs inspectors and Polish frontier guards.—Editor's note].

The Danzig note was not published here, but one commentator said, in view of the strong Polish attitude, the wording of the note was secondary to the fact that Danzig authorities had yielded.

Polish circles believed the Senate's decision not to enforce the customs regulations had been made with the knowledge of Berlin.

U.S. Workers Asked For Library Funds

the library, which is to be erected on a 12-acre tract at Hyde Park. Frank C. Walker, of New York, former chairman of the National Emergency Council, heads the committee, which includes such names as Bernard M. Baruch, Will Hays, James R. Cromwell, husband of Doris Duke, Jesse H. Jones, Henry Morgenthau, sr., father of the Secretary of the Treasury, and Lawrence W. "Chip" Robert.

Solicitation of Government employes, Appleby said, is the result of the committee's activity. Agriculture Department employes from various States, he declared, were under pressure from people in their States engaged in raising funds for the library to make contributions.

He decided, he said, to organize the solicitation by routing it through one channel. Appleby said it was against the department's regulations for outsiders to come in and solicit employes. Except in the case of the American Red Cross, which is permitted to solicit directly, he declared, solicitation for other "worthy causes" is handled by someone in the department.

The Ingram letter says that checks should be made payable to the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Inc., and should be sent to Ingram's office not later than 4 p. m., September 5.

"Acknowledgments will be issued from the New York headquarters," the letter says.

A bill authorizing the Government to accept the Roosevelt collection, and providing for Government maintenance of the library building when it is completed, was enacted at the last session of Congress, and the President, at a recent ceremony at Hyde Park, signed the deed conveying the land for the library to the Government.

Baby Girl, Born With Heart Lying Out on Chest, Lives

Manila (Tuesday), Aug. 8 (AP).—An infant girl born with her heart exposed was reported "doing nicely" on the second day of her life.

Dr. Guillermo Del Castillo, attending physician, said he expected the baby to live since her heart beat and breathing were normal. Other physicians who gazed at the heart through a glass jar that covered it disagreed.

The heart rests on the chest over a small opening, through which the aorta connects the organ with the thoracic cavity, where the heart normally is found.

An operation to enlarge the opening in the chest, permitting the heart to drop into the cavity where it belongs, was decided against.

Doctors said there was only one other such case in recorded medical history.

Arlington Plans New Parkway Unit

County Officials to Confer With U. S. Commission; Cost Will Be $45,000

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST, Clarendon, Va. Tel. OXford 0509.

Arlington County officials will confer tomorrow with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission on a tentative agreement for developing Unit 2 of the George Washington Memorial Parkway.

Representing the county will be County Manager Frank C. Hanrahan, Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas, County Engineer C. L. Kinnier, Traffic Engineer Clifton G. Stoneburner and Planning Engineer Frank L. Dieter.

It was learned yesterday that the project will cost the county $45,000 in cash and land credits, and not $50,000 as had been expected.

$10,000 in Property Donations

While county officials would not discuss the exact terms of the agreement, which may be presented to the county board at its meeting next Monday, it is understood donations by private property owners will amount to $10,000. The county set aside $5,000 in last year's budget when negotiations for development of the parkway began, and an additional $19,500 for this purpose was provided in this year's budget.

The remaining cost to the county is to be made up by donating county property located in Rosslyn to the Federal Government. It is understood this property has been appraised at $15,000. The county would retain privilege of maintaining a self-operating water pump on a small section of the land.

Will Relieve Lee Highway

Unit 2 will extend the parkway from its present terminus, a short distance beyond Key Bridge, up the river bank to Spout Run. The parkway will extend inland on each side of Spout Run to a point in the vicinity of the Lee Highway near Thrifton Station.

Completion of Unit 2, county officials said, will relieve traffic from the congested Lee highway through Rosslyn. Traffic from Lee highway and the Country Club section can come down the Spout Run connection, drive along the river beneath Key Bridge and connect with the Lee boulevard at an intersection near the Arlington Memorial Bridge. Other traffic can leave Lee highway and Key Bridge and continue around Unit 1 to the Memorial Bridge.

Harassment Tactics That Closed Jimmy's To Be Continued

The campaign of harrassment, which resulted in closing Jimmy LaFontaine's place, will be directed against every known gambling establishment in Prince Georges County, State's Attorney H. Winship Wheatley, jr., announced yesterday after a conference at Upper Marlboro with members of the special vice squad.

"Our purpose is to rid the county of every gambling house," Wheatley said. "The present strategy of having police officers stationed at the entrance to these establishments to take the tag numbers of patrons will be continued unless more severe methods are required. The end justifies the means, and we will do everything possible to accomplish our purpose."

Although Prince Georges County residents are usually employed at these establishments, Wheatley said, investigation had shown that most of them were operated by persons from other States.

It was understood that the establishment marked as next on the list in the antigambling crusade suddenly closed its doors yesterday. A "For Rent" sign was posted outside. Wheatley praised the work of the three county police officers assigned to the gambling campaign—Sergt. Elon Turner, Corporal John F. Dent, and Charles N. Thomsen.

These men spent three days last week at the entrance to LaFontaine's, jotting down the tag numbers of automobiles entering the grounds. The patronage gradually fell off until Saturday when several employes were stationed at the entrance to notify would-be customers that "nothing was doing."

$1,255,055 Is Assigned For Va. Youth Work

Richmond, Va., Aug. 7 (AP).—The National Youth Administration in Virginia has been allotted $1,255,055 to carry its out-of-school youth work program through the 1939-1940 fiscal year, Deputy State Administrator T. Edwin Burke announced today.

In the last fiscal year the Virginia out-of-school program was allotted $356,117.

Edwin Harlan, Noted Lawyer, Is Dead at 53

Was All-American Football Player at Princeton in 1907

By the Associated Press

Bel Air, Md., Aug. 7.—Edwin H. W. Harlan, 53, prominent Harford County attorney and an All-American football player for Princeton in 1907, died at his home today after a lengthy illness.

Active in various public posts until ill health forced his confinement a year and a half ago, Harlan had been city attorney of Bel Air, counsel to the Harford County Board of Elections Supervisors, counsel to the county board of education and an examiner in equity.

His athletic prowess made him prominent at Princeton, where he enrolled in 1904 after graduation from Episcopal High School in Alexandria, Va.

He won All-American honors as a quarterback on the Tigers team, and also was captain of the college baseball team.

After graduating from Princeton in 1908 he entered the University of Maryland Law School and obtained a law degree three years later.

He was the son of former Judge William H. Harlan, of Bel Air.

Surviving besides his father include a son, Edwin, jr.; a brother, William H. Harlan, jr., of Wauchula, Fla., and three sisters, Mrs. John Lyman, of Walla Walla, Wash.; Mrs. Horace Boarman, of Bel Air, and Mrs. Charles Bagley, of Baltimore.

Arlington Republicans To Pick Slate Tonight

The Arlington County Republican convention will meet tonight at Ashton Heights Woman's Clubhouse, North Irving street.

The convention will name a complete slate of officers for both county and State to oppose the Democratic nominees at the November election.

11 Vacancies Listed

Richmond, Va., Aug. 7 (AP).—C. T. Garrett, secretary of the board of examiners of the United States Civil Service Commission here, announced today competitions for 11 positions in agricultural, dietetics and lithographic work with three Government departments would be held here.

Child Bride, 14, Now a Mother, Hopes Some Day to Own Doll

By the Associated Press

Pennsboro, W. Va., Aug. 7.—A 14-year-old mother cuddled her newborn second child today at her hill cabin home near here, but sighed wistfully for a doll because she has never had one.

Her first child, a boy, was born in July, 1938, but died a month later.

She and her husband live in a three-room shack on her father's farm, where she has spent all her life except for a trip into Pennsboro to marry Stackhouse when she was 13.

She proudly exhibited her daughter to visitors, but expressed hope that some day she might have a doll, too.

It seems her daughter, Geraldine Delores, received her name in a roundabout way.

Fredericksburg Area G. O. P. Drive Gets Underway

Special Dispatch to The Post

Fredericksburg, Va., Aug. 7.—With Democratic primaries out of the way, Republicans here and in adjoining counties were bestirring themselves today in the hope of capturing county and State offices in the November general election.

Chief development was the announcement that the City Republican Committee would meet tomorrow night to nominate Dr. F. T. Cassiday to run against Dr. W. A. Harris, Democrat, for the House of Delegates from Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania.

The next G. O. P. movement in this section is expected to be the nominating of L. R. R. Curtis to seek the office of commonwealth's attorney of Stafford County. R. H. L. Chichester, jr., was named the Democratic candidate in the Tuesday primary.

Sheriffs Maxey L. Blaydes, of Spotsylvania, and W. E. Curtis, of Stafford, both seek re-election.

S. P. Powell, former commonwealth's attorney, of Spotsylvania, will endeavor to unseat the Democratic incumbent, S. Bernard Coleman, in November.

The G. O. P. candidate for commissioner of revenue in Stafford is Ryland Heflin.

'Queen of Flag' To Be Chosen Tonight for Play

The most popular girl in northern Virginia will be chosen tonight as the "Queen of the Flag" for the historical pageant, "The Birth of the Flag," to be presented at the Arlington Youth Center, August 14-20.

The "queen" will be the guest of Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, at a luncheon tomorrow at the Capito.

Leading in the race for "queen" are Mildred Bloen and Virginia Smarr. The runner-up will be named Miss Arlington, and the candidate in third place, Miss Virginia. Dorothy Simpson is now in third place. Following Miss Simpson are Louise Imolden, Elsie Simmons, Kitty Helms, Hope Hamilton and Doris Pearson.

A "Queen's Court" of 12 will also be chosen from the leaders in the contest.

Retail Merchants Will Gather Today

Richmond, Va., Aug. 7 (AP).—Retail merchants from eight States and the District of Columbia will open their twenty-sixth annual convention here tomorrow.

Approximately 1,000 merchants are expected to attend the three-day meeting. Christian Munt, secretary of the trade extension bureau of the Richmond Chamber of Commerce, said several of the Richmond wholesalers had arranged style shows, exhibits and other displays for visiting buyers.

Builders Meet Tonight

A discussion on the possibility of registration of contractors will feature the meeting of the Northern Virginia Builders Association tonight at 8 in the Lee Tavern, Glebe road and Lee boulevard.

Brain Trusters Urged by Byrd To Quit Capital

By the Associated Press

Strasburg, Va., Aug. 7 (AP).—"The cause of true liberalism would be better served." Senator Harry F. Byrd asserted here, "if all the brain trusters from Tugwell to Corcoran would go home and allow the chosen representatives of the people to shape the laws of the Nation without interference."

BYRD

Extreme conservatism or reactionism and extreme radicalism should be avoided, Byrd told a gathering at a picnic sponsored jointly by the Rotary Club and the Boy Scouts of nearby Fisher's Hill.

"What we want is sound progress built upon a firm foundation," the Senator declared. "A progress built upon debt and deficits is like a house built on the sand. Virginia and the Federal Government are as far apart as the poles in this respect."

Mennonite, 83, Flies 150 Miles to Church Ceremony

Harrisonburg, Va., Aug. 7.—Elias Brunk, 83, Mennonite leader and one of the outstanding residents of Rockingham County, yesterday took his first airplane flight—and liked it.

It was no short sight-seeing spin over the city. Instead it was a 150-mile trip to Scottdale, Pa., to attend the dedication of the new Mennonite Church at the denomination's publishing center. Brunk, long known for his progressive ideas, commented upon his return in time for supper that the flight made him feel ten years younger. He said he enjoyed every minute of it and added that he never dreamed of such a trip in his younger days.

7 Get Terms In Alexandria Liquor Cases

Heavy Fines Also Imposed on 5; ABC Officers End Probe

Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board investigators climaxed a week of activity in the Alexandria area yesterday, when seven violators of the State liquor law received heavy sentences at a special session of civil and police court, Judges James R. Duncan meted out jail sentences in every case, while fines accompanied five of the seven convictions.

Linwood Herbert, 36, fined $50 and costs and sentenced to serve three months in jail; J. H. Roseborough, 44, colored, fined $50 and costs, three months in jail on each of two violations, sentences to run concurrently; Sarah Dixon, 43, colored, fined $100 and costs, three months in jail on each of two violations, sentences to run concurrently; George Allen, 31, colored, four months in jail; James Foley, 48, four months in jail; Earl Posey, 43, fined $50 and costs, three months in jail; James Roykard, 24, colored, fined $50 and costs, three months in jail on each of two violations, sentences to run concurrently.

The arrests were made by State Investigators W. S. Peyton, J. W. Delaney, T. R. Hall and F. M. Tymosko, assisted by Policemen Padgett, Hawes, Johnson and Saunders, of the Alexandria Police Department. All arersts were made over the week-end.

Council to Study Library Branch

Summoned from its summer recess to discuss several matters requiring immediate attention, the Alexandria City Council faces a docket of 14 items at its special meeting tonight at 7:30 in Council Chamber. Mayor Richard L. Ruffner will preside.

One of the major items is consideration of a proposal to establish a branch for colored readers at the Alexandria Library, which has been operated for the benefit of white patrons only since it was donated to the city by Dr. Robert S. Barrett several years ago.

Action on the matter has been hastened after George Wilson, colored, recently filed a petition with the Corporation Court requesting a writ of mandamus compelling Miss Catherine Scoggin, city librarian, to issue him a card for the use of library facilities. The petition, submitted through S. Lee Tucker, local attorney, has been taken under advisement by the court.

Cars Hurt 4; 1 Driver Held As Drunken

Traffic Death of Boy Ruled Accidental; Milk Man Hurt In Freak Mishap

Four men were injured and another man arrested for reckless driving and driving while drunk as a result of traffic accidents in and near the District yesterday. At the same time, following an inquest, Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald certified as accidental the death of George Tarant, 8, killed in an auto crash Thursday.

The arrested man is William A. Dixon, 39, of Benning, D. C., held in default of $1,000 bond at the Hyattsville Jail after a crash at Sergeant and Chillum roads, Prince Georges County.

Auto Passenger Injured

Eighteen-year-old Melvin De Hart was in Casualty Hospital last night with a broken right leg and multiple injuries as a result of the accident. Hart, who lives in Landover, Md., was a passenger in Dixon's car.

Oscar Basilikl, 25, of 2527 Tenth street northwest, was the driver of the other car. He suffered lacerations of the head and was treated by the Bladensburg Rescue Squad, which also removed young Hart to the hospital.

Elmer Haslett, 20, of Arlington, Va., was treated at Emergency Hospital for lacerations of both legs, received when he lost control of his milk truck in a freak mishap on Ashmead terrace northwest.

Crate Jams Accelerator

Haslett told police the machine shot through a barricade at the dead-end of the terrace and overturned after a milk crate fell on the accelerator.

George Tortossian, 50, of 216 C street northwest, suffered abrasions and contusions of the head and right leg when he was hit by an auto driven by Carl C. Cooke, 24, Fort Myer, Va., in the 400 block of F street northwest.

Col. Goodfellow Dies in New York; Headed Hospital

New York, Aug. 7 (AP).—Col. John Carroll Goodfellow, 65, president of the board of directors of Polyclinic Hospital, died today.

A native of Washington, the retired colonel was a graduate of Virginia Military Institute and practiced law in Washington before joining the Army. His Army record included service in the Spanish-American War, in the Philippines, on the Mexican border and in the World War.

He was the son of the late Col. Henry Goodfellow, one-time judge advocate of the Army, and a direct descendant of Leonard Calvert, early Maryland settler.

Two Convicts in Virginia Break Surprised In Tourist Cabin and Taken Without Struggle

Caught in Illinois, Pair Will Be Grilled in Attempted Train Raid

By the Associated Press

Kankakee, Ill., Aug. 7.—Two of the seven prisoners who escaped from Federal guards near Thornburg, Va., July 26 were recaptured in a tourist camp near here today.

Deputy Sheriff Gen. La Fontaine said they identified themselves as Gerald Montague, 21, of Kankakee, who was serving three years for the theft of a taxicab, and Walter Smith, 22, of Cincinnati, a convicted postoffice burglar.

La Fontaine and another deputy, Walter Bauer, surprised the pair as they slept in a cabin. They were armed, but did not offer resistance.

With five other Federal prisoners, Montague and Smith were being transferred by bus from the penitentiary at Atlanta to the Government prison at Lawrenceburg, Pa., when they escaped.

After overpowering the guards they commandeered an automobile driven by a woman and headed south toward Richmond. Montague and South said the fugitives separated soon afterward and that they hopped a freight and arrived here July 28.

GERALD MONTAGUE WALTER SMITH

At Chicago, A. A. Imus, chief postal inspector, announced he had sent two men to Kankakee to question the prisoners about the attempted seizure of a $36,000 Army payroll aboard an Illinois Central train last Monday.

Two men boarded the train at Onarga, south of Chicago, but were driven off by guards. One, John Waldon, of Chicago, was shot and captured. The other escaped in an automobile driven by a confederate along a highway bordering the tracks.

6,000 See Mann Win Decision Over Dudas

Victor Near A Knockout At Stadium

Fans Howl for Kayo And Then Ask Fight Be Stopped; Daniels, Marine, Drops Foe

By Al Hailey.

Nathan Mann, New Haven contender for the world's heavyweight championship, made a sorry mess of Steve Dudas' face last night at Griffith Stadium as he pounded it almost at will to take an unanimous 10-round decision over the Jersey City fighter in the headline match of Washington's first all-heavyweight boxing show.

While more than 6,000 fans—the largest turnout for a fight here this year—howled wildly for a knockout, Mann worked methodically on Dudas' person and had the spectators screaming for Referee Charley Reynolds to stop the fight in the eighth round.

Dudas Battered in Eighth

While theNew Haven boy came a step closer to his hope for a return match with Champion Joe Louis, his exhibition showed he has a long hill to climb before he can be termed Louis tender.

The battle lacked knockdowns, but it was a slam-bang affair that found Dudas in trouble no less than three times and a badly beaten man at the end. Mann weighed 184½, Dudas 191.

Dudas, his face raw from Mann's continuous punishment, came out in the eighth to face a barrage of right and left-hand punches that drove him all over the ring. Nathan backed Steve into a corner in the late stages of the round and punished Steve mercilessly with rights and lefts. Blood from Steve's left eye spattered freely over the nearby fans in the ringside.

Steve lost the first three rounds, took an edge in the fourth, dropped the fifth but came back to box on even terms in the sixth. That was his last display. He covered and hung on the remainder of the match, peering through a heavy film of blood at the weaving and bobbing Mann.

Daniels Kayoes Foe

In a dazzling display of two-hand punching, Maynard Daniels, 194, Marine reserve private, knocked out Jake Friedman, 191¼, of Baltimore, in 40 seconds of the first round of their scheduled six-round semifinal.

Daniels rushed out of his corner swinging, and after a flurry of lightning blows by both boys, landed a dynamite-packed right to the point of Friedman's jaw that sent him down and out. Jake folded with the punch and Daniels had time to put one more hard left into his midsection before he hit the canvas, to lay motionless while referee Charley Reynolds counted ten.

It was a highly impressive return to Washington for Daniels, who has been devoting his talents to the West Coast, where he has piled up a record of six consecutive knockouts. Friedman met the hurricane-like attack of Daniels with one almost as deadly. For 30 seconds the two stood in midring swinging with everything they had. Then Jake went down.

The knockdown came so quick it left the 6,000 howling customers breathless. Rising to their feet in a display of enthusiasm not seen at Griffith Stadium all summer, they made the rafters ring.

After pounding Odell Jackson, 189, of Durham, N. C., for five rounds, Jim Wilson, 208¾, of Harrisburg, Pa., knocked him out in 55 seconds of the sixth round with a whistling left hook to the mid section.

Badly outclassed but game, Jackson was dizzy from a count of nine he took in the first round and obviously suffering from a low blow in the second. He had Wilson in trouble with body blows in the third but could not stand up against Wilson's roundhouse rights and lefts.

In the night's opener, Ralph Ivans, 186½, another Gould-Braddock protege, defeated Steve Kadash, 170, substituting for Baltimore's Al Lowman, by a technical knockout in 2 minutes 25 seconds of the third round. Ralph was hitting Steve at will when Referee Harry Volkman stopped the fight.

Al Hart, dusky reminder of a Charles Atlas advertisement, showed a lack of class in taking a six-round decision over Abner Powell, jr., of New York. Powell outweighed 36 pounds at 189, threw a couple of vicious rights into Al's face and midriff and the big Washington Barracks colored fighter backed up. He managed to floor Powell for a count of nine in the third round, however, and Powell appeared listless through the remainder of the struggle.

Marion Miley Sets Record In Western

Paces Field in 39th Western Golf Closed Play at Detroit; Gets 4 Birdies, Eagle

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 7.—Her putter a magic wand, Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., blazed to a new course and qualifying record as she paced a field of 141 contestants in the thirty-ninth anual closed championship of the Women's Western Golf Association at the Oakland Hills Country Club today.

Miss Miley, winner of the Western in 1935 and 1937, shot 37, 37—74 as she required but 25 putts for the rounds. She had eight one-putt greens. Her score eclipsed by one stroke the previous qualifying record of 75 set by Mrs. Opal S. Hill, of Kansas City, in the 1937 tournament at St. Paul.

Compared to women's par of 78, Miss Miley rapped in four birdies and an eagle. The course record until today was 77, held by Edith Estabrooks, of Dubuque, Iowa, who played with Miss Miley and shot an 82 to qualify handily.

Five shots behind Miss Miley was Eleanor Dudley, long hitting Chicagoan, who is a junior at the University of Alabama. Third place was held by Beatrice Barrett, of Minneapolis, who faded to a 43 on the inward nine after equalling the medalist's card on the outgoing route.

Two former champions—Mrs. Russell Mann, of Milwaukee, the former Lucille Robinson, and Dorothy Traung, of San Francisco—were included in the group bracketed at 81. Others with this total were Mrs. Dan Chandler, of Dallas, Texas State champion, and Mrs. Hayes Dansingburg, of St. Paul.

At 82 were Miss Estabrooks, Ella Mae Williams, of Chicago, and Elizabeth Hicks, of Long Beach, Calif, the southern California champion.

No favorites failed to make the grade for the match play that starts tomorrow among the 32 low scorers in today's round.

Coach Layden Fans' Choice To Lead Stars

Notre Dame Mentor Tops Nation-wide Football Balloting

Chicago, Aug. 7 (AP).—Elmer Layden of Notre Dame is the "people's choice" to lead the College All-Stars against the New York Giants, professional football champions, in the annual August charity game.

The final tabulation of votes in the coast-to-coast contest to pick a staff of coaches gave the head coach's job to Layden with a total of 5,127,888 points. The voting losed last Saturday midnight.

Big Ten—Harry Stuhldreher, Wisconsin, 2,918,150.

East—Carl Snavely, Cornell, 1,160,907.

South—Bob Neyland, Tennessee, 1,496,335.

Far West—Edward (Slip) Madigan, St. Mary's, 894,275.

The game is scheduled for the night of Aug. 30 in Soldier Field. The college squad of 69 seniors already has been named in a similar poll.

Nats' Winning Streak Chases Away Their Most Ardent Fan

Thelma Griffith Is Refusing to Attend Games at Stadium

Thelma Griffith, pretty blond daughter of Clark Griffith, refuses to attend any games at Griffith Stadium. She's scared.

She's scared because the Nats started their seven-game winning streak early last week without benefit of her presence, and she thinks it's some kind of an omen.

Miss Griffith, who can hear the shouts of the fans from her office at Griffith Stadium, where she is secretary to the Nats' owner, is yearning for a glimpse of the surprising Nats in action, but is content to make the sacrifice of nonattendance.

"It's wonderful the way the team is going," said Miss Griffith, "but it's no fun for me. I'd rather see a ball game than eat, but I won't go in that park until the team's winning streak is broken. If it happened while I was in the park, I'd blame myself, after the success they've had when I didn't see them play.

Krakauskas to Face Yankees in Opener

A team known as the New York Yankees who are supposed to occupy some sort of a high position in baseball matters, today will be opposed by the midsummer sensations of the American League—Washington's once-despised Nats, now the haughty owners of a seven-game winning streak.

It's a curious state of affairs as the Yankees open a three-game series at Griffith Stadium. Of late there has been nothing imposing about the Yanks—they took a double licking from Cleveland on Sunday—while the Nats have been rocking along irresistably on their longest winning streak in three seasons.

Manager Bucky Harris, prayerfully operating with a three-man pitching staff comprised of Dutch Leonard, Ken Chase and Joe Krakauskas—and getting away with it—has the trio readied for the three games with the Yanks. Today it will be Krakauskas against either Atley Donald, the Yanks' rookie sensation, or Monty Pearson, who has beaten the Nats habitually in the past.

There has been no mystery about the Nats' mid-season surge. Well-pitched ball games have been beating down the opposition along the way and there have been definite signs that Chase and Krakauskas, the two annual spring training sensations, have finally blossomed as dependable mid-season pitchers.

Some Fine Hurling

Within the past week, Chase has served up a two-hit and a four-hit game and Krakauskas eight days ago pitched a ball game without walking a batter for the first time in his life. Leonard merely has been pitching his knuckler and brooking no defeat.

Coincident with the Nats' pitching revival has been the sensational defense they have thrown up behind their hurlers. Double play production has been stepped-up miraculously by the smooth play of Jimmy Bloodworth at second base, and Buddy Lewis has not been the same errant performer on third base. The play of both Cecil Travis and Charley Gelbert at shortstop has bordered on the remarkable side, and Mickey Vernon is providing the best first-base job the Nats have received all season.

The Nats have not been affected, either, despite a pair of damaged catchers. Tony Giuliani, the new spark of the team's batting attack until he was disabled a few days ago, has scarcely been missed what with Rick Ferrell taking over the catching job again despite the fact that his bruised thumb still annoys him.

Yanks Off Form

The Yankees come to Washington at a time when their customary batting attack is not manifesting itself. Save for infrequent displays of power in their recent home stand, the Yankees were being stopped by capable pitching. The impression has been growing that they no longer are the terror of the league.

Dodgers Beat Bees by 7-6 In 10 Innings

Night Game Turns Into Seesaw Affair; Two Homers Count

By International News Service

New York, Aug. 7.—A single by Dixie Walker, Brooklyn outfielder recently obtained from the Detroit Tigers, tonight gave the Brooklyn Dodgers a ten-inning, 7 to 6, victory over the Boston Bees. A crowd of 27,950 fans watched the contest under the arc lights.

Home runs by Max West of the Bees in the second inning with two on and by Cookie Lavagetto for the Dodgers in the seventh featured the game.

Both teams used three hurlers. Tot Pressnell and Ira Hutchinson preceded Tamulis to the mound for Brooklyn. The latter was credited with the victory. Bill Posedel started for the Bees and was relieved by Johnny Lanning in the eighth. Joe Sullivan, who took over the pitching burden after that was charged with the defeat.

B. Rideout Is Heckled After Race

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 7.—America's handpicked athletes followed the herculean figure of Bill Watson and the flying feet of Clyde Jeffrey today to a notable triumph over the track and field forces of 15 other nations in an "Olympic preview" at the White City Stadium.

About 60,000 fans defied the raw weather and rain to see the international meet but they were well rewarded. As the Americans piled up 54 points, 13 of them by Watson and ten by Jeffrey, to Great Britain's 41, three British records were shattered and two equalled.

The lone jarring note was the loud and raucous razz handed America's Blaine Rideout when he swung wide to pass two other runners at the start of the last lap of the mile. It was evident from the stand that Blaine had been forced wide but, probably because he was considered the cause of Sydney Wooderson's downfall at Princeton in June, he got the old bird just the same.

Varoff Is Winner

Whatever it was, the incident had little bearing on the result of the race. Denis Pell, who has been shadowing Wooderson all season, went out like a deer on the backstretch and won comfortably in 4:15.2. Janusz Staniszekski, of Poland, was second and Rideout fourth.

This victory for Britain plus B. F. McCabe's third and C. Cox's fifth put the Britons into the lead—temporarily. But George Varoff captured the pole vault with a disappointing leap of 13 feet, 6 inches. Next Watson, who had taken third in the discus, broke the British shot put record with a heave of 52 feet, 8 inches, then walked over to the broad jump pit and leaped 24 feet, 6 inches for his second victory. That was the ball game.

The Americans started as though the meet was being run for their benefit. Charlie Beetham, former Ohio State star, knocked off the half-mile—just striding—in 1:52.3. Then Jeffrey started his sprint double by winning the 100-yard dash in the creditable time of 9.8 seconds over a soggy track.

Hoosier Triumphs

Roy Cochran, Indiana youth apparently unawed by a field that included J. Bostmans, of Belgium, and Fritz Hoelling, of Germany, won the 400-meter hurdles in 52.7, a clocking that set up a new British record and was only one-tenth of a second off the international mark. He jumped into the lead at the second hurdle, increased his advantage on the backstretch and breezed home 3 yards in front of Hoelling.

Jeffrey followed with the 220 that was notable only for the ease with which he won. His time of 21.8 was six-tenths of a second off the British record but he still was 2 yards in front of Britain's A. W. Sweeney, who also was second in the century.

The third British record went to Taisto Maki, latest in the line of great Finnish distance runners. He won the 3 miles in 13:59.4 and left no doubt he is the strongest possible contender for next year's Olympic distance titles at Helsinki.

A Brilliant Race

Never troubled, never for an instant slackening his stride, Maki ran a brilliant field right into the ground and when Tiny Alexis Csalpar, of Hungary, challenged him the Finn did an astounding thing. He broke into a sprint and came down the home stretch like a dash man finishing the 220. Ray Schwartzkopf, United States representative from Michigan, was last from the start and plodded home a good 220 yards behind the Finn.

Indians Buy Peters

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Just in case you're dashing off to Saratoga today to buy yourself a yearling at the annual sales, caveat emptor, as the old Romans used to say. Don't trust what may be your own skimpy judgment of horseflesh in the formative stage against the slick wielders of the auctioneer's hammer in the sales ring. There is a science to buying race horses.

POVICH

Of course there's always the chance that a buyer will grab the brass ring out of the whirl for a modest expenditure as Mr. Sam Riddle did when he led Man O' War away for $5,000. But even as astute a connoisseur of bloodlines and conformation as Mr. Riddle was no doubt properly surprised when his purchase went out and fetched him $250,000 in purses in two years of racing, plus another $100,000 in stud fees.

But for every success story that had its genesis at the Saratoga sales there are hundreds of abject failures, failures which were, in fact, foredoomed because buyers led away steeds that were not equipped physically to win races however beauteous they may have looked under the lights. The chap who can't cast a practiced eye over a yearling has no business whatsoever in making a bid.

So if you have a yen to own a race horse and were thinking about picking up a bargain at Saratoga and you're just a Johnny-come-lately to the racehorse business, there's only one thing to do. Let an old timer do your bidding for you or go into session with R. W. Collins' tome entitled "Race Horse Training" and peruse carefully the chapter on selection of a yearling.

Broadcasts This Warning:

Mr. Collins broadcasts this broad general warning at the outset: "One must know defects and be able to recognize them instantly," or one is lost at the sales. In fact, he is a chump, Mr. Collins hints. In his experience, he says, William Woodward, of Lexington, Ky., can spot a defect quicker and farther away than any man he knows and that if he pronounced a horse sound, don't worry about calling a veterinarian.

The best judge of a yearling whom I know," Mr. Collins writes, "is Col. Philip T. Chinn. He can walk into your paddock where 8 or 10 yearlings are grazing or milling about, glance about casually for less than 5 minutes, then walk away and tell you the best one and why, and what is the matter with the others, and if you are any judge of horseflesh yourself, you'll agree with him." It's no coincidence that Col. Chinn has been a spectacular figure in the annual bidding at Saratoga.

Mr. Collins' advice to any and all would-be buyers at Saratoga who are not familiar with thoroughbred breeding is to button-hole real quickly somebody who is and thus be guided in the bidding. "Just acknowledge your lack of judgment and get someone who really knows horses to examine the yearlings you think you like."

The good big horse can usually beat the good little horse, Mr. Collins agrees, but beware of the oversized steeds in the sales ring. Usually they don't pan out. "Large yearlings grow into large horses and big horses have a penchant for running through themselves if they have any speed. Most of them have so much weight of their own that they pound their legs into unsoundness, spend a couple of years first encouraging and then disappointing their owners, and end by your remembering the training bill instead of the horse. In general, buy a medium-sized yearling. A very small one is often a quick comer and will win his share of juvenile sprints, but usually becomes a cheap horse."

Don't Worry About Horse's Color

And another thing, don't worry about your horse's color. Good horses come in all colors although Mr. Collins warns that it is well to remember, however, "that white legs are usually softer than dark ones and the same applies to feet. It is wise to remember also that legs and feet are the things the horse runs with and on and without good ones, the other perfections are wasted."

If he were buying a race horse, Mr. Collins would demand that his yearling be smooth and fine and have balance. "Some of the coarse horses make good ones, but the longer I owned a course, rough horse, the less I would like him. By balance I mean that all the parts of the horse ought to be proportionately symmetrical, and made to fit. How often you see horses with backs too long, necks too short or to wide, heads to big, legs too long or too short or too heavy, etc.

"These horses lack balance. A well-balanced horse is a composite of excellence of all parts that go to make up his conformation. As he stands before you his feet will be well under his body, in just the position to bear the weight the easiest. He won't have to be pushed and backed about to make him look right at you, as a horse made right just doesn't have any bad stances, and he looks good in whatever manner he comes to rest."

How to Investigate Character

If you want to investigate the character, the disposition and the courage of a racehorse, look at his head even as you would scan the face of a human for the same qualities. "Look for a clean-cut, smart-appearing head with alert, sensitive ears, big, well-set eyes with plenty of width and no conspicuous bulge between them. That bulge usually means ill-temper and flightiness. Be sure the teeth meet evenly. Very short necks are always misfits. A yearling very thin necked may be delicate.

"Withers should be high and thin, the back short and strong, coupled to the quarters in a smooth, sweeping curve. The quarters should be broad and strong, leaving no long, thin shank above the hock. Be sure the barrell is deep at the heart. The legs from the knee to the ankle should be very lean. Round, fat-legged horses are very hard to keep sound. Don't mind if the front feet turn out slightly, but avoid pigeon-toes. Turned-out hind feet are very bad. The straighter the hind feet the better.

"To be preferred is a thin-coated, fine, soft-haired horse with a thin mane and tail. Those thick-coated horses with heavy tails and manes are usually otherwise coarse also, and not so alert mentally. Bill Woodward has always said that a gentleman always dresses well and that a fine horse will also wear fine clothes."

Riggs Rallies, Wins Opening Rye Match

By the Associated Press

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Bobby Riggs started the defense of his Eastern grass court championship in his usual indifferent fashion today, dropping his preliminary set before overcoming Leonard Hartman, of New York, 4—6, 6—3, 6—3, at the Westchester Country Club.

Yielding the set wasn't entirely voluntary on Bobby's part, however, for he battled Hartman stubbornly for it before he finally lost it, on a combination of his own errors and Hartman's accurate stroking. Riggs was playing flawlessly, however, as the match neared its end.

The other seeded players also advanced to the second round. Frankie Parker, of Kansas City, defeated Bob Kerdasha, of Woodcliffe, N. J., 6—0, 6—4, and Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, Parker's latest doubles mate, turned back J. Norman Anderson, of New York, 6—1, 6—1.

Sidney Wood, of New York, ousted Doug Imhoff, of Berkeley, Calif., 9—7, 4—6, 6—4, while Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., Riggs' doubles mate, outlasted Bernard Jacoby, of New York, 6—0, 5—7, 6—1. Gil Hunt, of Washington, D. C., turned in a 6—2, 6—4 victory over John Shostrom, of Chicago.

Others who gained the second round were Gardnar Mulloy, of Miami; Henry Prusoff, of Seattle; Ladislav Hecht, of Czecho-Slovakia; Hal Surface, of Kansas City, and John Hope Doeg, of Rumson, N. J.

The women began the process of catching up with Alice Marble, defending champion, who yesterday marched into the third round. Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan defeated Charlotte McNeill, of Bound Brook, N. J., 6—1, 6—0.

Kay Stammers, of England, top-seeded foreigner, made her debut and with the aid of a first round bye and a 6—1, 6—1 triumph over Baba Madden, of Jamaica Plains, Mass., joined Miss Marble in the third round.

Charles E. Hare, of England, first-seeded foreigner, who arrived from London this morning, was upset by young Dave Freeman, of Berkeley, 6—1, 6—3. Freeman, former national junior champion and national badminton champion, had too much speed for the Englishman.

Farm Credit Defeats Labor Board Netmen

The Cameo Furniture Co. ball club returned home yesterday after defeating Woodstown, N. J., to the tune of 4-2.

The big bats of Frank Gradoville and Eddie White, aided by sparkling infield play, allowed Ray Sooy to win a well-deserved five-hit game. He struck out seven batters.

Cameo is anxious to book out-of-town games on Saturdays and Sundays.

John, Joe Stage Show, Final Answer Is 'No'

Horicon, Wis., Aug. 7 (AP).—The Sorgent brothers, John and Joe, put on a two-man show as Mayville defeated Horicon in baseball yesterday. John pitched a no-hit, no-run game, and Joe, who caught, hit a home run that made the final score 1 to 0.

Central, St. John's Inaugurate High School Night Football

City Rivals Will Clash October 6

Game Will Be Played At Central; Pearce Releases Schedule For Next Season

By Bill Burnett

High school football at night! That was the definite prospect of schoolboy fans in Washington when Hardy Pearce, grid coach at Central High, released his 1939 schedule yesterday.

For the first time in the history of scholastic grid competition here, Central, 1938 champion of the public high schools, will meet St John's, Catholic prep titlist, under the arcs at Central Stadium on October 6.

The game will be a carryover from last year, when the two highly successful elevens mopped up local competition with few losses. Both Pearce and Gene Augusterfer, mentor of the Johnnies, attempted to arrange a game for the city championship but the high school eight-game rule and other barriers were in the way.

Confident that the game still has more than the average public appeal, Pearce and Augusterfer have slated it early in the season at night so that everyone interested might attend. There are no rules forbidding the playing of night ball in the high school set-up. The only obstacle has been the absence of lights in the schoolboy bowls. It is still an obstacle.

"As everyone knows," Pearce said yesterday, "we have no arcs in our stadium. We probably won't have them installed permanently, even yet, but we'll hire them for the occasion."

The clash with the Johnnies will not be Central's only engagement at night. On October 27 the champs will take a hop down the river to Alexandria to meet George Washington High. Four interhigh and two other outside games, with Gonzaga to start the season and Washington Lee High, wind up Central's schedule.

In defense of their 1938 interhigh crown the Mount Pleasanters will play Roosevelt October 20, Wilson on November 10 and Western on November 17. Those games are in their own western section. Their one-game choice in the eastern division will be Tech, which will be met on November 3. The championship game between eastern and western winners will be held on November 30.

Central's Schedule

September 29, Gonzaga, at home.
October 6, St. John's, at home (night); 13, Washington-Lee, at home; 20, Roosevelt, away; 27, George Washington High, away (night).
November 3, Tech, at home; 10, Wilson, at home; 17, Western, at home.

Complete Interhigh Grid Schedule

October 6, Tech at Anacostia; 13, Wilson, at Eastern; Roosevelt, at Western; 20, Anacostia, at Eastern, Central at Roosevelt; 27, Roosevelt at Tech, Western at Wilson.
November 3, Anacostia at Wilson, Tech at Central; 10, Eastern at Western, Roosevelt at Anacostia, Wilson at Central; 17, Tech at Eastern, Western at Central; 21, Wilson at Roosevelt; 30, Eastern vs. Western, championship playoff.

Long Jim Barnes Is Now Champion Of Eastern Acers

BARNES

Teeing off late in the afternoon in a stiff breeze, Barnes placed one of his five allotted tries 2 feet 2 inches from the pin to outdo his 162 competititors.

Barnes ousted a young Queens architect, Frank Majer, jr., from the lead, Majer, also an afternoon starter, finished second with a 2-foot, 7-inch shot.

The field of 163 started exceeded by 29 the number who sought aces at the same site last year. In eight years of competition, 3,721 players have tried for aces, hitting a total of 18,606 shots. Three aces have been scored (one in 1933, two in 1937) making the official odds against an ace in this tournament exactly 6,201 2-3 to 1.

The special women's prize today was won by Maureen Orcutt, former Metropolitan and Jersey women's champion, with a ball 13 feet 2 inches from the cup.

Conn Ballyhoo Starts For Dorazio Battle

Philadelphia, Aug. 7 (AP).—The ballyhoo got under way today when Billy Conn, who fights Gus Dorazio here August 14, arrived from Pittsburgh and was hauled up to city hall in an old-fashioned tallyho for an official welcome.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Pittsburgh's All-American back for the past two years, Marshall Goldberg, is shown talking things over with Charles Bidwell, owner of the Chicago Cardinals, National League pro football team, after signing a one-year contract with the Cards yesterday in Chicago. Although no salary terms were disclosed it was believed Goldberg will get between $10,000 and $12,000

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Aug. 7.—It may not be as bucolic as it has been painted, but the annual Corntassel Derby—Wednesday's $40,000 Hambletonian—still possesses the gentle aroma of hay. Streamlined Scotch and gin troughs will dot the old good-time track at Goshen, N. Y., and you won't be able to throw a rock without hitting a prominent pillar of the New York saloon set. But a country doctor by the name of L. M. Giulinger, from Andover, Ohio, seems to have the winner of the race, a bay colt called Peter Astra, and all those ancient pilots who squat on their sulkies in the world's most uncomfortable posture will be back to whip and coax and cluck their chargers around the bends.

CONSIDINE

The owners and patient trainers of the country's leading trotters will meet tomorrow morning to deposit the $500 starting fee and discuss the running of this Kentucky Derby of harness racing. About a dozen trotters will start. Dr. Giulinger's colt, one of only two that he owns, will be driven by Dr. Hugh M. Parshall, who has been the leading money-earner in harness racing for 12 of the last 13 years.

Peter Astra will be such a favorite that the bookmakers probably will bar him from their slates. The winter-book favorite, Nibble Hanover, came down with a charley-horse some time back and will not start. The colt was sent to Orchard Beach, Me., a month ago, in the hope that he might work the kink out of his legs by swimming in the surf. But the water was too cold for him, and he balked at going in.

Peter Astra Will Draw Highest in Auction

Peter Astra, of course, will bring the highest bid in the auction. Each year at Goshen the Messrs. Eli Crutch and Frank Muzzy set up their Chautauqua tent and auction off the chances of the various entrants. They take 10 per cent of all the pot which goes to the person who bids highest for the trotter that wins.

The brown old men who drive the trotters met yesterday to consider a new-fangled starting gate which has been used in the West but not in the East, and, of course, never in the Hambletonian. It is a pole-like device which stretches across the track and runs on trolley wires. From the pole hang other wires, spaced so as to give room for a trotter.

The device starts its slow little trip some 80 feet from the actual start of the race, while a phonograph counts up to 15. At 15 the pole, and the trotters beneath it, have reached the starting line and off they go. All the drivers except Dr. Parshall were in favor of using it to start the heats of the Hambletonian. But Parshall had his way.

They're All Pretty Sore at Steve

The starter, as usual, will be Steve Phillips. He is a tough, curt man who is not adverse to passing tart remarks about the old boys who drive. They're all pretty sore at him, but he's too good to vote out.

Unlike the winners of the Derby, the Preakness and other running classics, the winner of the Hambletonian gets only 55 per cent of the purse. Six horses cut in. Nobody has ever known how much the farmers and the city slickers bet on the Hambletonian, but it has been estimated that a million dollars changes hands at that little kite-shaped track during the afternoon in question.

W. H. Cain, who owns the Good Time Track, is opposed to parimutuels and there is talk that even if the machines come to New York, he'll run the Hambletonian as it always has been run—with bookies taking the bets. The New York State Racing Commission has no jurisdiction over trotting.

The most amazing trotter of all time was a filly, Goldsmith Maid, a singular fact when one realizes that only one filly ever won the Kentucky Derby. Six of the previous 13 winners of the Hambletonians were fillies, but the girlies won't even have a standard bearer this time, unless Dunbar Bostwick's Countess Christine gets over her housemaid's knee between now and the time they blow the bugle that sounds the monetary resurrection of the horse and buggy days.

Pitt's All-America Back Signs Year's Contract; Salary Believed $10,000

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 7.—Marshall Goldberg, Pittsburgh's All-America back of the past two years, signed a one-year contract today with the Chicago Cardinals of the National Professional Football League.

Charles Bidwill, owner of the Cardinals, did not disclose the salary terms but said "Goldberg's contract called for the largest sum we've ever given a college 'freshman.'" It was believed, however, that the speedy, 190-pound former collegian will receive between $10,000 and $12,000.

Goldberg, named to the Associated Press All-America mythical eleven in 1937 and 1938, will leave with Bidwill tonight for the Cardinal's training camp at Duluth, Minn. The former Pitt ace will study Cardinal plays for a few days before returning to Chicago, where he will play with the Collegian All-Stars against the New York Giants in a charity contest August 30.

The acquisition of Goldberg, a driving runner and one of the most outstanding collegiate backs of recent years, gives the Cardinals the nucleus for a powerhouse offense. Coach Ernie Nevers is mapping an attack to take full advantage of Goldberg's line-smashing ability and also plans to drill him in forward passing.

Shankman's Defeats Ida's Store Nine, 12-8

Shankman's Market junior baseball team, in second place in the Takoma Recreation League, defeated Ida's Department Store, 12-8, yesterday. The hitting of Second Baseman Hanlein, who drove in four runs and scored one himself, won the game for Shankman's.

2 D. C. Records Are Shattered In A.A.U. Swim

Y. M. C. A. Men and Ann Arnson Break Ann Aronson Break

Two city records were shattered last night as Y. M. C. A. men swimmers took the team title and Ann Arnson, of East Potomac, won high individual scoring among the women in the annual D. C. A. A. U. swimming and diving championships at Takoma pool.

Taking first places in four events and breaking the 300-yard medley relay record by three and nine-tenth seconds with 3:17.3, the Y amassed 35 points as against 24 for the second place Shoreham team. East Washington Optimist Club, 8; Airport, 7, and Army Navy, 2, followed in order.

Petite Miss Arnson, though she lost her 50-yard free style championship to Patsy Palmer, of Shoreham, retained her 100-yard free style title, and also won the 150-yard individual medley in record time and the diving to total 18 points for women's honors. She finished second in the 50-yard free style.

Miss Palmer, with a second in the 150-yard medley and a third in the diving besides her upset in the 50-yard free style, totaled 10. June Booth Stan, returning to competition after a layoff of more than 18 months, was third with 10 points, fashioned of a victory in the 100-yard backstroke and a third in the 150-yard medley.

Miss Arnson's record-making time in the medley was 2:16.2. The old time was 2:22.

Mrs. Stan might have broken Betty Strohecker's 100-yard backstroke mark had she been pressed in the race she won by fully 10 yards. In the absence of defending Champion Miss Strohecker and also Ann Arnson and Dorothy Steinbraker, who withdrew at the last moment, Mrs. Stan had little competition.

Despite unexpectedly strong competition from Bert Williams, rapidly improving teammate, Bill Tarbett, of Shoreham, retained his low board diving championship. His winning margin was only seventy-six hundredths of a point. His total was 90.93; Williams' was 90.14.

Marshall Sees Coast-to-Coast Pro Football

St. Louis and Los Angeles are the two most likely spots for new pro grid teams, he said, explaining "it is apparent the national circuit must expand."

"Some claim St. Louis is a poor sports town," he said, "but Branch Rickey talks differently. He's convinced St. Louis will support high class sports and will go strong for professional football.

Three Upsets Shake Mid-Atlantic Tennis

Frank Shore Defeated After Near-Collapse in Play at Edgemoor; C. Smith and Ritzenberg Meet Reverses in Third Round

By Jack Munhall.

A pair of former nationally ranked players who are scrapping for their places in the local realm and a dark horse from Chevy Chase yesterday rocked third round singles play in the Middle Atlantic States tennis championships at Edgemoor with a triple-barrelled upset which saw the early elimination of three heavy favorites.

Unorthodox, bespectacled Samuel K. Hayes, third-ranking player of the New England States in 1935 and again in 1937, used his peculiar looping forehand with telling effect to score the day's most important form reversal, beating fifth-seeded C. Alphonso Smith, 6—1, 7—5.

Following close behind dapper Dick Murphy, 1933 Longwood Bowl champion and the Nation's twelfth-ranking player that year, polished off Frank Shore with the aid of a third-set default by the Edgemoor Club star who nearly collapsed from heat and exhaustion. And then Charlie Sturtevant, like his co-conspirators an unseeded entry, brought joy to the exclusive circles of the Chevy Chase Country Club by whipping the new Public Parks champion, Allie Ritzenberg, 6—3, 4—6, 6—4.

Welsh trimmed DeWitt Smith, 6—0, 6—3. The second-seeded Lynch whipped Charley Channing, 6—2, 6—2, and Buddy Adair, seeded eighth and last, overcame the veteran Tom Mangan after a struggle, 4—6, 6—2, 6—1.

Shore, seeded sixth, was unable to continue his torrid battle with Murphy after coming from behind to win the second set, 7—5. He dropped the first after more than an hour of taxing play, 9—7. After lying down to rest for the decisive set he complained of pains in his chest and legs and was helped to the dressing room, where he was treated by application of ice packs to his heart. Afterward still pale beneath his tan and unsteady on his legs, he said he believed he would withdraw from the doubles.

Singles (third round)—Welsh defeated DeWitt Smith, 6—0, 6—3; Lynch defeated Channing, 6—2, 6—2; Murphy defeated Shore, 9—7, 5—7, default; Hayes defeated C. A. Smith, 6—1, 7—5; Sturtevant defeated A. Ritzenberg, 6—3, 4—6, 6—4. Doubles (first round)—Glassie-Train defeated Burgess-Sokol, 6—4, 9—7.

Tooday's Schedule

Singles (quarterfinals)—2:30, Welsh vs. Sturtevant; 4:30, Lynch vs. Hayes.
Third round—4, Farrin vs. Stocklinski.
Doubles (second round)—4, Glassie-Train vs. Smith-Bashore; 5, Turner-Ritzenberg vs. Royal-Staubly; 5:30, Farrin-Shore vs. Sturtevant-partner; Kelles-Roberts vs. Hardy-Kreusberg.
Third round—5:30, Johnsen-Lynch vs. Stocklinski-Hayes.

Furniture Nine Wins Over Jersey Team

Shenkin and Sallant took the only match for NLRB, beating McConnell and Sweeney, 6—5, 7—5. For FCA, Allen and Brownell beat Mallet-Prevost and Knapp, 6—1, 6—3; Bradbury and Vincent downed Ghent and Nevros, 6—1, 6—2; Learmoth and Slemmons took Cobey and Glaser, 7—5; 6—1, and Livingston and Foster won over Artson and Cohen, 6—3, 6—2.

Pitcher Triples

Pitcher Farley helped Diamond Cab nine to a 4-2 decision over Quick Service yesterday at Walter Reed when he hit a triple in the fifth inning with a mate on base.

Servicemen Play For Stone Benefit

An all-service team recruited from nearby Army posts and naval bases by Sergt. W. P. Griffith, Bolling Field sports figure, will meet Lou Blue's Baseball School nine at Ballston Stadium August 24 in a game to be played for the Johnny Stone Day fund.

Fifty per cent of the gross receipts will be donated the fund being raised for the former Washington club outfielder who is fighting for his health in a North Carolina resort.

Bill Tilden Loses

London, Aug. 7 (AP).—Hans Nusslein, of Germany, retained the Southport professional tennis singles title today, defeating Big Bill Tilden, 6—2, 7—5, 6—4.

Spanish Champ, Paulino's Cousin, On Grunt Program

Juan Ologuival, who claims the wrestling championship of Spain and the rock of Gibraltar, will make his local debut Thursday night at Turner's Arena when the Golden Terror returns to Washington to swap groans with Nanjo Singh, the turbaned Hindu "cobra deathlock" man.

A gentleman of much resource, Juan calls himself the Spanish woodchopper and further states he is a first cousin of Paulino Uzcudun, the Basque fighter who has been knocked around in more world's heavyweight championship bouts than anyone can or cares to remember.

Senor Ologuival will meet Rory Red Ryan, latest victim of Nanjo's cobra clutch, and from the looks of the things said about Juan by Promoter Joe Turner's agents he will get a chance at Nanjo as soon as the public tires of seeing Singh and the Terror in action—something that is likely to grow into a return match or two.

Two Purses Feature Inaugural Card Today at Cumberland

Steeplechase Program Set For Meeting

400 Horses Stabled OnGrounds; $16,000 In Purses Await Winning Owners

By the Associated Press

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 7.—The Cumberland Fair Association's sixteenth annual horse race meeting, offering $16,000 in purses and presenting steeplechases for the first time, will open at Fairgo at 2 p. m. tomorrow.

The Col. W. H. Robertson Purse and the F. Brooke Whiting Steeplechase top tomorrow's inaugural day card. Both are $500 events. Steeplechases also will be run Thursday and Saturday.

Horsemen, trainers, jockeys, sports writers and racing officials will be guests of Harry A. Manley, president and general manager of the fair association, at a dinner at the Jockey Club tomorrow night.

Wednesday will be Elk's Day and Cumberland Lodge, No. 63, B. P. O. E., will award a trophy to the winner of the feature event.

Bowlers to Organize

An organization meeting of the Mount Rainier Bowling League will be held Thursday at 8 p. m. at the Mount Rainier alleys. Competition will be held on 16 alleys this year.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WILDMUTE, $6.00, $3.20, $2.40; POMPE GRANDE, $3.80, $2.40; SHAILLEEN, $2.60.

WILDMUTE moved to the leaders with a rush in the first three-sixteenths, drew into a good lead, increasing her advantage steadily through the stretch run. POMPE GRANDE dropped back slightly after leaving the backstretch, but came willingly during the closing drive. SHAILLEEN fought her way out and close quarters and, while finishing in determined fashion, was unable to endanger the leaders.

SECOND RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $800. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:00. Off at 3:01½. Winner, Mrs. W. H. Cane's b. c. (2), by Sir Flag—Rhea. Trained by H. L. Campbell. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:47 2-5, 1:00 2-5, 1:07.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—RHEANUS, $19.80, $7.80, $4.20; PICTURE PLAY, $3.40, $2.60; GINO THOR, $4.00.

RHEANUS, away fast, was steadied along in closest pursuit of PICTURE PLAY when the latter went to the front, responded gamely through the stretch and, taking command, drew clear at the end. PICTURE PLAY opened up a good lead in the first three-sixteenths and, rated along in front, was weakly ridden through the stretch. GINO THOR went prominently placed throughout and held on with good energy to the close. ABBASSIDE outpaced early, was unable to close any ground.

Daily Double, Wildmute and Rheanus, Paid $76.80

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:30. Off at 3:32½. Winner, Mrs. E. McCurn's b. f. (3), by Haste—High View. Trained by J. Morrison. Value to winner, $675; second, $150; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23, 0:46 4-5, 1:13 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HASTY STAR, $4.60, $3.40, $2.60; FERDINAND, $8.40, $4.60; FLAGORLAND, $4.00.

HASTY STAR went to the front at once, soon drew clear and, rated along under slight restraint, was roused several times when reaching the stretch and never seriously threatened. FERDINAND, slow to begin, moved into contention in the run through the stretch and closed with good courage. FLAGORLAND, unable to keep pace early, worked his way up gradually on the outside during the last 3 furlongs and closed with good energy.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 4:01. Off at 4:03. Winner, H. E. Enger's br. m. (5), by Pick—Bejerville. Trained by C. A. Grande. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 3-5, 0:49, 1:15, 1:41 4-5, 1:48 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STAR LOOM, $15.00, $8.60, $4.40; INTERPRETER, $16.20, $9.40; RIVER DEE, $3.80.

STAR LOOM, never far from the lead and slightly restrained until the last five-sixteenths, readily assumed command and drew out steadily in the stretch run. INTERPRETER, reserved until leaving the backstretch, went to the front with a rush and, while holding on gamely, was unable to go along with the winner when challenged. RIVER DEE responded gamely when called upon and held on willingly through the stretch drive. TIEMPO drew clear straightening out on the backstretch, but weakened through the last 3 furlongs. DIAN, bumped around the first turn and far back until the last 3 furlongs, closed a good gap thereafter.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For 3-year-olds; allowances. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 4:30. Off at 4:34. Winner, P. A. Markey's gr. g. (3), by Jean Val—Alice Flag Cloud. Trained by R. E. Pettis. Value to winner, $750; second, $150; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23, 0:46 2-5, 1:12 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CARLISIA, $3.20, $2.80, $2.60; ROBESPIERRE, $4.00, $3.40; ISKIE, $5.20.

CARLISIA went to the front soon after the start, opened up a good lead and, rated along in front, was roused several times and drew out after meeting a bid from ROBESPIERRE. The latter was in close chase of the winner for most of the trip, made his effort straightening out in the stretch, moved up briefly, but was unable to better his position. ISKIE, slightly reserved early, came gamely on the inside through the stretch run. MUTINOUS, outrun early, came with a belated rush.

SIXTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000; claiming. The Jefferson. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:01. Off at 5:03. Winner, H. G. Bedwell's b. c. (3), by Seahatter—Sweep Pat. Trained by H. G. Bedwell. Value to winner, $750; second, $150; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 1-5, 0:48 3-5, 1:13 1-5, 1:40.

GOOD ODDS	(Charlton)	103	3	5	5	5	5	5	5	3.70

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TANGANYIKA, $15.40, $8.20, $4.40; OFF GUARD, $6.60, $4.00; KEYMAN, $4.40.

TANGANYIKA was slightly reserved while following along in closest pursuit of OFF GUARD, disposed of the latter for the lead when called upon, drew clear and, meeting a bold bid from KEYMAN in the stretch, drew clear in the run to the finish. OFF GUARD, hard hustled from the start, was given a breathing spell when suspended from the lead and closed with good energy in the stretch run. KEYMAN moved up gradually, saved considerable ground into the stretch and, weakened in the last sixteenth. SIR MOWLEE, slightly reserved early, was unable to better his position.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 5:33. Off at 5 35½. Winner, D. Homewood's b. f. (3), by Infinite—Lawless Candy. Trained by A. W. Jackson. Value to winner, $675; second, $150; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 1-5, 0:49, 1:14, 3-5, 1:41 3-5, 1:48 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BREADANBUTTER, $8.00, $4.40, $3.40; LATE PASS, $3.80, $2.80; FLYING JACK, $3.60.

BREADANBUTTER took command in the opening strides, drew away into a good early lead and, rated along under slight restraint, was never seriously threatened although ridden out smartly through the stretch run. LATE PASS, slightly reserved while in pursuit of the pace, was vigorously ridden during the last five-sixteenths and finished determinedly. FLYING JACK, unable to reach the leaders during the first half mile, came willingly through the stretch and was along in the concluding stride to wear down JOLLY FLAG. The latter, well placed from the start, was unable to better his position.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $900; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 6:03. Off at 6:05. Winner, R. J. Macomber's ch. g. (4), by Petee Wrack—Susset. Trained by W. E. Collins. Value to winner, $675; second, $150; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:50 3-5, 1:15 4-5, 1:42, 1:48 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GRIEWRACK, $5.20, $3.20, $2.60; CONRAD MANN, $3.80, $3.20; COUNT COTTON, $5.20.

GRIEWRACK was steadied along in closest attendance of COUNT COTTON, the latter establishing the pace, gained a slight lead when straightening out in the stretch and drew out in the last furlong. CONRAD MANN, as usual, was slow to begin, began bettering his position when rounding the far turn and, closing with a rush, was along in the last stride to wear down COUNT COTTON.

Cup Regatta's Plans Moving Ahead Swiftly

The reports of the various committees at the President's Cup regatta luncheon yesterday at the Hotel Harrington indicate that the progress on the regatta, to be held here in September, is far in advance of last year.

It was learned that the sailing division has completed arangements for its end of the regatta, which will be held on September 16 and 17, the week-end preceeding the powerboat events.

Twelve classes of international and national sailboats will compete in three heats, one on Saturday and two on Sunday. Over 40 entries have already been received for these events.

The swimming committee reported that clubs all along the Eastern coast have been contacted about sending teams to the swimming championships, to be held at the Shoreham Hotel on Saturday night, September 16. Noted swimmers from Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York and other cities have already entered, making the total of entries the greatest in the history of the meet.

G. Aubrey Bogley, chairman of the powerboat race committee, indicated that several new Gold Cup entries were expected for the President's Cup race, feature of the regatta. In the other classes, the entries are far in advance of last year. In the 225-cubic-inch displacement class alone 17 entries have been received.

Guests at the luncheon included Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, Gen. Albert Cox, of the D. C. National Guard and Col. R. S. Thomas, engineer in charge of building the new airport. Maj. Ernest W. Brown also was invited, but was unable to attend because of work at Police Headquarters.

Potomac Insurance Election

Stockholders of the Potomac Insurance Co., of the District of Columbia held their hundred and eighth annual election meeting yesterday. On March 31, 1831, President Jackson, Vice President John C. Calhoun, and Andrew Stephenson, Speaker of the House of Representatives, signed an Act of Congress creating "the Potomac Insurance Co. of Georgetown," and on the first Monday in August of that year, the stockholders met and elected 12 directors to serve for the ensuing year from that date.

Yesterday, 108 years after the first election of directors, a similar meeting was held which resulted in election of the following: John H. Grady, Judge A. A. Hoehling, Charles E. Hood, C. F. Jacobsen, Sir Francis Norie-Miller, Bart, James F. Mitchell, Stanley Norie-Miller, Thomas C. Moore, C. F. R. Ogilby, Alexander K. Phillips, Douglas R. Phillips and Frederick Richardson.

Officers of the company are John H. Grady, president; Thomas C. Moore, vice president and manager; Judge A. A. Hoehling, second vice president; Alexander K. Phillips, secretary; Mrs. J. W. Lawler and W. C. Dent, assistant secretaries. Notwithstanding the reduction in insurance and interest rates, the company shows satisfactory gains for the first six months of 1939. It has added $112,000 of surplus; assets are in excess of $5,000,000 and the surplus to policyholders is $2,755,484.

Cotton Futures Up; Commodity Corp. Funds Restored

New York, Aug. 7 (AP).—The cotton future market today mirrored a favorable interpretation of Congressional action in restoring $119,000,000 to the impaired capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation closing prices were up 4 to 5 points.

The market was none too active, however, in view of the Government crop report due Tuesday and suspension of Liverpool futures trading for the August bank holiday.

Principal support was in the form of Bombay and Liverpool buying orders plus a fair amount of trade price fixing. Pressure came through hedging and Wall Street and New Orleans selling.

Cottonseed Oil

More pressure on cottonseed oil futures dropped the market 2 to 5 points today and close to the lowest levels of the season. Favorable cotton crop news, an easier trend to other oils and a lower slant to grain prices checked any effort to rally the market.

Sales totaled 194 lots: September 5.70, October *5.76, December 5.93, January *5.97, March 6.08.

Wheat Prices Decline With Cooler Weather

Drop at Minneapolis Contributes to Early Downturn in Pit

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 7.—Cooler, unsettled weather in the North American spring wheat belts dropped wheat prices here today as much as a cent a bushel. Offerings, however, lightened on the downturn and the close was only ⅛@½ down.

September contracts fell to 63⅛, down a cent from Saturday's close, before rallying moderately. Contributing to the early downturn here was weakness at Minneapolis, where September wheat fell 1⅛ cent. A lower corn market also depressed wheat.

September wheat here closed at 63¾@63⅞, and December at 64⅜@64½. Corn finished ⅛@⅜ off, September 42⅛@42¼, December 42⅛; oats ⅛ up to ⅛ off, soy beans ½@1 cent down, rye ¼@⅜ lower, lard unchanged to 2 cents higher.

Georgia Bright Leaf Tobacco Prices Decline

Atlanta, Aug. 7 (AP).—Second-week sales in the Georgia bright leaf tobacco auctions totaled $4,801,260.59, the State department of agriculture reported today. Growers sold 35,135,362 pounds of the leaf in 15 markets for an average price of 13.67 cents. This compared with the opening week average of 14.75, when growers disposed of 27,024,786 pounds for $3,985,575.62.

With well over half of the new crop already sold, the season total for Georgia showed 62,160,148 pounds auctioned for $8,786,836.21.

Figures announced by the department of agriculture brought the total sold this season to 62,540,676 pounds at a total cash yield of $8,843,471.12. The season average to date for the nine sales days is 14.14 cents a pound.

Commercial Loans Drop in Past Week

The weekly condition statement of member banks in 101 leading cities today showed such loans on August 2 at $3,887,000,000, compared with $3,899,000,000 for the week ended July 26. Commercial, industrial and agricultural loans increased $24,000,000 in New York City, but declined by the same amount in the Chicago district.

Security Prices Close Generally Lower As Trading Volume Shrinks in Dull Session; All Bond Groups Decline

New York, Aug. 7.—Washington and Europe, which have been fashioning security markets for weeks without regard to business indices, fell down miserably today in providing investors with news of the red-hot, off-the-griddle variety. By late afternoon, when the market closed out a dull day, the best that Washington had been able to offer was that the President had signed a bill aimed at card sharps on American ships at sea.

The Free City of Danzig, storm center in the Polish Corridor dispute, did a little better than Washington, but not much. The Polish Senate, which is Nazi controlled, has notified Poland that it is willing to negotiate the margarine and herring customs war. In informed quarters it was felt we may be able to avoid being dragged into war to protect some one's trade in artificial butter and pickled fish. With such momentous questions settled for the Nonce, Wall street took things easy.

Fluctuations Small

Stock prices were so easy that they lost an average of 0.40 point. A few individual issues dropped 1 to 2 points, but the vast majority of fluctuations were small. There was no unusual pressure on the list, but a comparatively small amount of selling pressure was sufficient to bring about declines.

Doubtless, the dullness reflected in part a desire to sit out a dance or two after the whirlwind of last week, in which the retiring session of Congress took an axe to the Administration's spending plans. That may well have been one of the most important weeks during the reign of the New Deal; certainly there has been no period in the last six and a half years in which Congress has displayed such independence with regard to the wishes of the executive.

No Sudden Change Expected

As such it will have a far-reaching effect upon business and security markets, but just when this will be manifested cannot be foretold. The fact that the lending-spending program was killed does not mean that immediately private industry will be able to employ an extra million men and the fact that the New Deal school of economic thought has been liquidated does not mean that it will be unable to reform its ranks by the next meeting of Congress in January. Those in the financial district who are most encouraged by the political tide realize that we cannot expect any sudden change in business and markets merely because one important victory has been won.

The market today reflected minor professional operations and fluctuations were without significance. The motor and allied stocks were the most active of the day, the list being led by Chrysler, United States Rubber and General Motors, the first two showing declines of more than a point. A show of firmness was made by the lower grade rails, equipments and oils. DuPont dropped 2 points and there were losses of a point or more in such leaders as Can, Smelting, Telephone, Atchison, Commonwealth & Southern preferred, Nickel, Kennecott, Celanese, Montgomery Ward and Sears.

The weight of business news was on the favorable side. Steel operations for the week are placed at 60.1 per cent of capacity by the American Iron & Steel Institute, a gain of .3 point for the week. Settlement of the General Motors strike should stimulate automotive steel shipments as these manufacturers and the other leaders swing into production on their 1940 models.

A reflection of the softening commodity prices was seen in the index of the National Fertilizer Association which places its figure at the lowest since July, 1934.

Dullness here today was contributed to by the closing of several other markets. London, Amsterdam and some of the Canadian markets were closed for a holiday.

Bonds Are Lower

Listed bonds were dull and irregularly lower today in a typical summer session. Treasury bonds drifted downward as talk of the September refunding occupied the market. Best corporate liens held generally to previous figures. Among speculative railroad, traction, wire and other issues small recessions outnumbered the gains. Nor was the situation different in the foreign dollar section.

Losses in Treasury bonds ranged from 3-32 to 14-32 point, and were attributed largely to precautionary adjustments of bank portfolios in advance of the quarter-date operation, which is expected to involve $500,000,000 to $750,000,000 of new money. Guaranteed bonds of the Farm and Home Corporations were neglected. Telephone issues drifted fractionally lower, but best rated power and light bonds held their ground. The demand for highest grade industrials was illustrated by a fresh high in United States Steel debentures.

Rail Issues Easier

Medium-priced railroad bonds showed small losses as a rule, while a few issues here and there fell a point or more. Borderline and default rails likewise eased. Holding company bonds were off where changed, and industrial convertibles were similarly lower. Local traction issues attracted little attention, and communications bonds slowly receded. Other special groups were neglected.

Chilean bonds moved higher in the Latin-American default groups and some of the Colombians also were higher, but others remained neglected. German bonds were dull and not materially changed, while Polish issues improved despite the reports of increased European war apprehensions. Japanese bonds remained on the downward grade. Highest grade foreigns were quiet and well maintained.

General Motors Votes Dividend

New York, Aug. 7 (AP).—Directors of General Motors Corporation today declared a dividend of 75 cents a share in March and a similar amount in June. A total of $1.50 a share on common stock was paid in 1938.

Today's dividend is payable September 12 to holders of record August 17. Directors also ordered a regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 a share on $5 preferred stock, payable November 1 to stock of record October 9.

Coca-Cola International Corporation directors today voted a dividend of $5.80 a share on common stock, payable October 2 to holders of record September 12.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, Aug. 7, United States Department of Agriculture (AP).—New business was slow today on the Boston wool market. An occasional inquiry was being received for fine Western-grown wools. Recent buyers of three-eighths and one quarter blood fleece wools were either out of the market or bidding lower than prices that had been paid in the past few weeks. Asking prices on most holdings of domestic wools in Boston were firm compared with last week's selling prices.

More Than Double $1,669,828, Income For Like Period in '38

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Aug. 7.—Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. and subsidiaries today reported for the first half of the year net profit of $3,610,595 after charges and equity in undistributed earnings of subsidiaries not wholly owned. This was equal to 96 cents a share on common stock after preferred stock dividends and compared with $1,669,828, or 2 cents a common share, in the first half of 1938.

United Light & Power Co.

New York, Aug. 7.—The United Light & Power Co. and subsidiaries, reported today for the 12 months ended June 30 net income of $3,413,993, equal to $5.69 a share on the $6 first preferred stock, compared with net income of $4,340,980, or 21 cents a share on the combined Class A and B common, in the preceding 12 months.

Net income of the parent company only, the United Light & Power Co., was $640,901, equal to $1.07 a share on the first preferred, against $431,705, or 72 cents a preferred share, in the previous year.

T. W. A. Profit

Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc. placed June quarter net profit at $8,974 compared with a revised net loss of $192,928 in the similar 1938 period.

U. S. Commercial Alcohol Corp.

American Commercial Alcohol Corporation, for the six months ended June 30, reported consolidated net loss of $37,597 after adjustment of reserve for unrealized profit on sales subject to deferred delivery, but before subsidiary preferred dividends. After deducting subsidiary preferred dividends there was a loss of $87,371 charged to earned surplus. In the first half last year, the company reported net profit of $78,685 after similar deductions, equal after providing for subsidiary dividends to 10 cents a common share.

Houston Oil Co.

The Houston Co. of Texas for the six months ended June 30 showed net income of $527,507, equal to 23 cents a share on the common stock, compared with $841,535, or 52 cents a share, in the first half of 1938.

Interchemical Corporation

The Interchemical Corporation, manufacturer of printing ink and related products, reported for six months ended June 30 net income of $639,284, equal to $1.53 a share on the oommon stock, against $71,253, or $1.08 a share on the preferred stock, in the first half of 1938. The indicated net profit for the second quarter was $320,570, equal to 76 cents a share on the common, compared with $59,458, or 90 cents a share on the preferred in the second quarter last year.

Consolidated Cigar Corporation

Consolidated Cigar Corporation and subsidiaries reported net profit for the quarter ended June 30 of $218,895, equal to 27 cents a share on common stock, compared with $124,465, or 42 cents a share on 7 per cent preferred stock on the preceding quarter and $197,951, or 16 cents a common share, in the June quarter last year.

United Air July Traffic Up 53%

United Air Lines reported yesterday that for the second consecutive month travel in July exceeded all previous records in the company's history with an unofficial total of 16,600,000 revenue passenger miles. This is an increase of 10 per cent over the previous high mark of 15,180,186 revenue passenger miles achieved in June of this year.

The record-breaking July travel also represents a 53 per cent increase over the 11,006,096 revenue passenger miles flown by United Air Lines in July a year ago.

"This sustained increase represent not only greater vacation travel, but also a marked gain in regular business travel," said Harold Crary, vice president in charge of traffic. The larger newspaper and other advertising programs of United and the other airlines also are being reflected in this summer's increases in air travel," he added.

Final Quarter Factory Outlook Held Unfavorable

New York, Aug. 7.—The present relationship between the purchasing power index and the factory output index provides very unfavorable testimony in regard to the outlook for factory output for the final quarter of 1939, acording to a survey by the Alexander Hamilton Institute. There is no evidence that, instead of a decline in output, the purchasing power index will rise. On the contrary, it may be expected that the purchasing power index will decline.

The present relationship between the factory output index and the purchasing power index thus points to a very sharp recession. The prospect is that the decline in the index will not be halted until it drops below the purchasing power index and the outlook is that this will not occur until the purchasing power index is at a considerably lower level than it is at the present.

Industrial production has recently shown a tendency to expand, suggesting that the prospective slump indicated by the present relationship between output and purchasing power may be postponed until late in the year. It may be expected, however, that curtailment will be in evidence during the last quarter, unless the index of production and the index of purchasing power move in an unprecedented manner.

Advertising Linage 3.5% Over Year Ago

Chicago, Aug. 7.—During the week ended July 29, the volume of newspaper advertising placed by retailers was 3.5 per cent greater than during the corresponding week of last year, Advertising Age, national advertising newspaper, reported today.

Total volume for the year to date in reporting cities is given as 532,587,922 lines, a gain of approximately 8,800,000 lines over the 523,765,244 lines reporting for the same cities in the first 30 weeks of 1938.

Worsham's Ace Marks Md. Open Practice

Burning Tree Pro Sinks a 5-Iron Shot

Par at Hillendale Takes a Beating as Stars Prepare for Competition Today

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Towson, Md., Aug. 7.—Lewis Worsham, jr., the newly appointed Burning Tree professional, featured today's practice rounds for the nineteenth annual Maryland Open championship with a hole-in-one on the fifth hole of the Hillendale course, the first of his 21 years.

WORSHAM

While Worsham's ace was the highlight of the day, Defending Champion Andy Gibson and Middle Atlantic P. G. A. President Ralph Beach each played the sun-baked course in two strokes under regulation figures, 68's, and indicated that tomorrow's winning score will be under par.

Worsham had trouble on several other holes, finishing with a 76, while his playing partners, Bobby Brownell, Manor amateur, and Al Jamison, Indian Spring professional, had 70 and 74, respectively.

Post entries boosted the field to 65, within one of the all-time record entry in the 19-year history of the tournament. Leo Walper, two-time Middle Atlantic P. G. A. champion, was the lone pro entry, while the amateurs included William Eager, Maryland State champion; Ralph Bogart, Indian Spring; Otto Greiner, former Middle Atlantic and State amateur champ, and David Halle, Suburban. Edgar Lucas was the lone withdrawal.

A Five-Iron Shot

Worsham's hole-in-one was a five-iron shot that bounced once on the green and the second time it dropped in the hole. The foursome of Worsham, Brownell, Jamison and M. Whittlesey yelled to the foursome ahead to see if the ball was in the hole and a caddy shouted, "yes!"

The Burning Tree mentor used a five iron on the 164-yard uphill hole.

Al Houghton, four-time winner of this tournament, sponsored a small pro-sweepstakes event, and won the prize with a 1-under-par 69. Bobby Brownell had a practice round of 70, a score duplicated by Spencer Overton, former State amateur champion.

Leo Walper and Houghton, who have challenged any pro duo in the District to a match, hung another defeat on George Diffenbaugh and Robert T. Barnett, 3 and 2, with Houghton the mainstay of the match.

136 or Better Seen

Houghton, who holds the record in this tournament with a 139, will have to break his own mark if he hopes to hold it tomorrow as host to Charles Petschler thinks it will take 136 or better, four under par, to win the tournament.

The Hillendale course hasn't had a drop of rain in five weeks and the course is dry, and naturally short. The greens are fast, but the lowest score tomorrow will be four under par, or less, and they're betting on that here tonight.

Al Houghton, Cliff Spencer, Leo Walper and Mel Shorey will leave here immediately after the tournament tomorrow for the dapper Dan $10,000 Open in Pittsburgh, that starts Thursday, and runs through Sunday.

Skeet Stars Ready For National Meet

The entry list of more than 300 was a new record for attendance, officials said. The tournament, to end August 12, will be held on grounds of the Pacific Rod and Gun Club, on the shores of Lake Merced.

Champions in six of the eight national events will defend their titles. They include the Los Angeles Gilmore five man team, the all-gauge titlist, Henry B. Joy, of Detroit; Patricia Laursen, 17-year-old Akron, Ohio, miss who holds the women's title; Dick Shaughnessy, 17, of Boston, who rules the 20-gauge division; 13-year-old Clayton Boardman, jr., of Augusta, Ga., champion of the sub-junior class, and Jackie Horton, of Providence, R. I., junior division crown bearer.

'Little All-American' To Rejoin Pro Eagles

Philadelphia, Aug. 7 (AP).—Dick Riffle, of Corning, N. Y., former "little all-American" halfback from Albright College, Reading, Pa., will again play pro football this fall with the Philadelphia Eagles, President Bert Bell of the Eagles announced today. Riffle played with the Eagles last season, but was considered a holdout this year. Bell said Riffle would sign a contract tomorrow.

Vanderbilt Yacht Wins

London, Aug. 7 (AP).—Harold S. Vanderbilt's 12 meter yacht Vim, won her eighteenth race during the British racing season today, defeating Trivia and Blue Darlin in that order in the Royal Victoria Regatta at Ryde.

Three Days' Fishing—Three Tarpons

Anglers at Galveston, Tex., regard this gentleman as something of a wonder man. He's Harry Fiegel, and he caught three giant tarpons in three days—a record unparalleled in Galveston fishing annals. He is shown here with his third, and biggest catch—100 pounds of dynamite. Measuring 6 feet 1 inch, the silver king fought 30 minutes. Fiegel caught 23 in 1939

Bill Ackerman

On Fishing

Wirt Scruggs, who does most of his fishing in the downtown office of Eastern Air Lines, cast his line in the waters of the Chesapeake off West River on Sunday for a change and was rewarded with a fine catch of small Norfolk spot and tiny hardheads that overrun the shell beds and flats in August.

ACKERMAN

Imagine his chagrin, though, upon arriving back at the dock in Galesville to find a 90-pound tarpon hanging on the rack, as if to show him the possibilities of the area he had been fishing. And that was where it had been caught—but in a net. It was the second ever to be taken in this section.

There is, very definitely, a new complexion on fishing in bay waters. Here is a type of fishing that makes even the hardest to please sit up and take notice, that is eagerly awaited from year to year and is followed, no matter where it might be, just so long as it may be accomplished within several hundred miles of Washington.

The blues are in the Chesapeake. Several small schools raised on Southwest Middles on Sunday around midday, not for long, it is true. Many who saw them thought they were trout, and didn't bother to give them a try.

But Capt. Buddy Willoughby, fishing Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Miller and Mr. and Mrs. McSeaters and their 11-year-old daughter, Marion, did give the surfacing fish a try, and were rewarded with, as far as we know, the first catch of blues in upper bay waters this season.

Little Marion not only caught the first fish, an 8 pounder, but she was also top angler of the day with a beauty that weighed 13 pounds 3 ounces. It's a fish that has a swell chance, not only to take one of the fine prizes in the local Murphy Outstanding Fishing Achievement contest, but to place win in the field and stream or any of the national contests.

Still early, it is very unlikely that these fish will raise consistently, but they are well worth trying for anyone willing to take a chance.

Talking about consistency brings Ray Adams to mind. He's not only ready to go fishing anytime or any place, but will put in long hours and longer days in the furtherance of the sport closest to his heart. And that's just what he has been doing by way of chumming striped bass with green shrimp, but never quite making the grade until this past week, fishing out of Rock Hall on the Chester River.

"That one day," he says, "was well worth all those unproductive ones," and we are inclined to agree. Fifty-two stripers, none weighing under six pounds, and many running up to 11, caught on unweighted lines, is something to remember for many a day.

Another one to remember, and had it been entered it would have taken top honors in all the contests from one end of the country to the other, was the eight-pound small mouth bass caught in Virginia waters by Frank Wyatt.

The first thought of 99 out of every 100 anglers who know their bass fishing in this section will be—that it is a large mouth black bass. But they will be wrong this time. It is a small mouth black bass.

D. C. Printers Take Opener At Baltimore

Washington Champs Crush Monumental City Team, 18-6

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Aug. 7.—Unleashing a furious 21-hit attack, the Washington nine, champions of the Union Printers International Baseball Tournament for the past two years, smothered the Baltimore team, 18 to 6, at Oriole Park.

Four other contests also were played in the first round of the twenty-ninth annual tourney. The victors, besides Washington, were New York, Boston, Indianapolis and Detroit.

The winnin gteams and Pittsburgh, which drew a bye today, will meet tomorrow. The losing teams, St. Louis, Twin Cities, Chicago and Baltimore, also will play tomorrow, while the other losing nine, Cincinnati, drew a bye in the pairings. Two defeats eliminates a team from competition.

The Washington bats were loaded with dynamite and in three big innings—the second, fifth and eighth—the visitors pounded out six, four and five runs, respectively, to gain their margin of victory.

Rip Sole led the Washington attack with a double and four singles. Skip Gartland rammed a homer over the leftfield wall in the seventh and also smashed out a two-bagger and a single.

Joe Batiste, Tucson, Ariz., Negro schoolboy, missed victory in the high hurdles by inches but Ernest Lidman, of Sweden, had to tie the British record of 14.4 to lick him.

Even more surprising was the defeat of Erwin Miller, of Los Angeles, in the 440. He started brilliantly but on the backstretch Mario Lanzi flashed past him and went on to win in the record-equalling time of 47.6. Alan Pennington and A. G. K. Brown, Britain's great quarter-milers, were second and third, respectively, as Miller dropped back to fourth.

Batiste partially made up his defeat by placing third in the high jump which Les Steers, of San Francisco won without effort at six feet, six inches.

Northern Va. Tennis Entry Closes Today

Tournament to Open Thursday; C. Smith, D. C., Champion

Entries for the Northern Virginia Open Tennis Tournament, starting Friday at Mannsfield Hall Country Club in Fredericksburg, Va., close today at 6 p. m., it was announced yesterday.

Competition in men's singles and doubles will be staged, and players eliminated in the first singles round will play a consolation event. Silver trophies will be awarded, and a special trophy—the Benn T. Pitts Challenge Cup— will be offered this year. Name of the winner of men's singles will be engraved on the cup, and it will become the permanent possession of the first player residing within 20 miles of Fredericksburg who wins the trophy three years in a row.

C. Alphonso Smith, of Washington, winner last year, and former national boys' and national junior titleholder, will return this year as defending champion. Ted Breeden, jr., and Byrd Smith, winner of 1938 doubles play, return to defend their laurels.

Majority of the matches will be played in the late afternoon, and finals will be held September 3. All matches will be played under rules of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, and entry fees will be $1.35 for singles and $1.50 for double teams. Entries are expected from Washington, Alexandria, Quantico, Bethesda, Baltimore, Dalgreen, Richmond, Fredericksburg and other Virginia cities.

Orioles Defeated By Rochester, 2-1

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 7 (AP).—The Rochester Red Wings defeated the Baltimore Orioles here tonight in the first game of a twilight-night double header, 2 to 1. The Wings scored their winning run in the eighth inning of the scheduled seven inning contest. The second game was stopped by rain.

Fredericksburg Club Beats West Point Team

Special Dispatch to The Post

Fredericksburg, Va., Aug. 7.—The men's golf team of Mannsfield Hall Country Club defeated a team from the West Point (Va.) Club, 16 to 5, here yesterday. The women's teams of the two respective clubs tied, 1½ to 1½.

The Fredericksburg golfers will meet Dahlgren here Sunday, August 27, and the locals will journey to their course September 10.

The Brighter Side

By Damon Runyon

RUNYON

Our favorite magazine, the Law Enforcement Bulletin, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, is not as sprightly as usual this month.

In fact, it has a distinctly gruesome tone, what with leading off with an article entitled "A Guide to the Identification of Skeletial Material," and illustrating same with photos and drawings of skulls, pelvic bones and other portions of the human anatomy that caused us to have some perfectly dreadful dreams.

It is possible that Editor J. Edgar Hoover was not on the job for this edition of the Bulletin. He may have been occupied in editing the 500,000 pages of evidence that the FBI is going to present to a Federal grand jury in New York to show what a lot of skullduggery has been taking place in the underworld of the U. S. A.

We can imagine that editing 500,000 pages must have been quite a job and could not have left much time for the assembling of the contents of the Bulletin. We miss the little touches of color with which Editor Hoover usually enlivens the magazine.

We are not saying that "a guide to the identification of human skeletal material" is not of interest to some readers, but too many skulls got us down.

Feels 'Squmish'

We got to thinking that that is the way our own noodle looks under the hide, and it made us feel squmish. Not squeamish. Squmish. We may write a letter to Editor Hoover, signing it "Indignant Subscriber," protesting against such morbidities in the Bulletin. We can get those pictures, if we want them, in the illustrated weeklies.

The author of "A Guide to the Identification of Human Skeletal Material" is Wilton Marion Krogman. He is—and you must follow us carefully, now—associate professor of anatomy and physical anthropology of the University of Chicago and formerly associate professor of anatomy and physical anthropology, Medical School, Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio, University of Chicago, Ph. B., 1926; M. A., 1927, Ph. D., 1929.

The article, Editor Hoover states in a brief preface, should be considered as a valuable reference to the criminal investigator wherever the identification of bones becomes necessary. From that standpoint, we have no doubt that Prof. Krogman's findings are of the utmost importance, but to a lay reader of the Bulletin like us, they just disturb slumber.

Secrets Are Out

By his processes, as we understand the matter, it is possible to determine from skulls and other bones, the racial derivation of the subject, age, sex, size and all that sort of business. The way science is now leagued with the FBI there is no sense in trying to keep anything secret.

Much interest is being manifested in what will be said in the 500,000 pages that Editor Hoover's department is to present to the Federal grand jury. It is stated that it has taken some years to compile this document and that it will deal not only with the activities of the prominent characters of the underworld, but also with any persons who may have trafficked with these characters in any way.

For example, if you have ever sat down to a game of pinochle with a prominent character of the underworld, especially one who may at the moment have been in absentia from the call of justice, your name may be read out to the grand jury. This announcement, we fear, will cause uneasiness in many quarters.

It is also stated that the report will blurt out the names of cities in which prominent characters of the underworld have headquartered the past few years, which should be sufficient warning to the chambers of commerce of certain municipalities in these United States to get out the polishing pastes and fluids. They may need to use them on their civic escutcheons later on.

What's an Escutcheon

Still, the Chamber of Commerce of a city which has permitted the headquarters of underworld characters to an extent that becomes common knowledge, can scarcely be expected to feel any great sense of embarrassment over so small a matter as the marring of a civic escutcheon.

It is not possible in these times for any considerable colony of those characters to assemble in a city without the civic authorities being well aware of the fact, and the size and duration of the assemblage depends entirely upon the toleration of the authorities. In fact, there was a time when many civic authorities considered toleration a city's best defense against the underworld.

There used to be cities throughout the country that were known as "right towns." An underworlder was permitted to remain in those towns under an express agreement with the police that he would not "work" there. Thus a "right town" might be packed with underworlders, but the citizens would be safe from depredation, because the underworlders wanted to protect their own havens.

We doubt that any of those agreements now exist. In these times the underworld characters may occupy a city, but that is no guarantee of protection to the citizens, possibly because some civic authorities are more interested in protecting the underworlders.

Rubin Pitches No-Hit, No-Run Softball Game

Beats Western, 16-0; District Recreation Competition Starts

Play in the District Recreation Department's city-wide playground elimination softball tourney, which opened yesterday, moves into the second round today with four games booked in the junior division for the Lincoln Memorial reflecting pool diamonds at 10 a. m. and four senior division games at the same location at 1 p. m.

"Ruby" Rubin pitched a no-hit, no-run game for Park View to steal the show in the senior division. He shut out Western, 16 to 0. In other senior games Virginia Avenue beat Henry-Poly, 7 to 5; Van Buren downed Ludlow, 5 to 3; Palisades defeated Jefferson, 5 to 4; Phillips defeated Roosevelt, 7 to 4; Powell beat Burroughs, 4 to 1; Noyes swamped Judiciary, 17 to 1, and Sherwood was given a forfeit over Georgetown.

In the junior division yesterday, Barnard beat Takoma, 6-2; Van Buren took a forfeit when Eastern used ineligible players; Stoddert beat Park View, 6-5; Langley beat New York Avenue, 9-2; Palisades defeated Hine, 11-5; Powell beat Burroughs, 9-4; Henry-Polk beat Virginia Avenue, 16-3, and Sherwood took a forfeit when Montrose failed to place ten men on the field.

Today's tschedule brings together in the junior division Palisades and Powell, at No. 4 diamond; Barnard and Stoddert, No. 5; Henry-Polk and Langley, No. 6, and Sherwood and Van Buren.

Senior division games bring together Powell and Palisades, No. 6; Phillips and Park View, No. 7; Virginia and Noyes, No. 9, and Sherwood and Van Buren, No. 10.

A WOMAN'S TOUCH AT SUCH A TIME IS Priceless

Bereavement often is a time of emotional stress characterized by demands on a mortician that may tax his facilities and experience. A frequent request is for a lady assistant . . . a woman's touch . . . in a situation, that seems peculiarly feminine.

Hysong's have 3 lady assistants on duty, so that at least one is available at all times for the convenience and better service of our clients.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The forcing two-bid has become an institution in contract bidding, and the responses have changed but slightly since Ely Culbertson first developed and incorporated the bid in his system. Yet the questions this department receives about it are legion. Recently the problem has been aggravated by the several non-forcing two-in-a-suit bids in current favor.

Mr. Culbertson once said "Shooting is too good for the player passing his partner's forcing two." His words are still good today, excepting, of course, that rare occasion when an opponent obligingly sticks his neck out for a profitable penalty double. Only in such a circumstance may a forcing two-bid be abandoned below a game.

But the main source of trouble lies in choosing a response. Some players adhere to the book rule of one high-card trick for a positive response; others arbitrarily require one high-card trick and a half, probably subconsciously attempting to compensate for a "light" two-bid. Miss A. M. H. presents a close question on this point for discussion.

She writes:

"Last night my partner bid two spades. I bid three-clubs, holding:

◇ 8 5 3 2
♣ K Q 10 7 4

"My partner went to six spades and was set three because she said she thought I had a set-up suit. She claimed I should have bid two no trump, the negative response. My opponent, a bridge teacher, agreed with her. Who was right?"

Technically Miss A. M. H. is correct in bidding three clubs. According to the book, one high-card trick, such as the king-queen, plus a biddable five-card suit, is sufficient to make a positive response. Practically, it is a close question. The hand is bare and except for the presence of the two tens it is lacking in supporting honors. Thus it might be well to err on the side of conservatism rather than optimism, particularly if partner is a bold bidder. In any event, Mrs. A. M. H.'s partner has no right to blame her for the unfortunate result. The six-bid was on her own head.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

Employment in June in the executive branch of the Government reached an all-time high of 925,260 persons, for the first time exceeding the war-time peak of 917,760, it was revealed by Civil Service Commission yesterday.

Last December, the figure slightly exceeded the war-time high, but commission officials explained that it then included several thousand temporary Postoffice Department employes hired for the Christmas rush. The totals for June are almost entirely of full-time personnel.

In the month, total employment increased by 22,148 persons—termed a "usual seasonal increase"—and employment in Washington rose by 713, establishing a new high here above the 1918 figures for the fifth consecutive month. The total working in the District in June was 123,505.

Largest additions here were in the Interior, Navy and War Departments.

The Civil Service Commission, which was once described, in a masterpiece of understatement, as a "staid" organization, has become publicity conscious—or maybe somebody just went to the World's Fair. At any rate, the commission has suddenly blossomed with lobby displays of the most modern sort—maps with colored electric lights, charts of all varieties and collections of the organization's memorabilia. The whole effect is much the same as that which would result if grandma discarded her "electric" and whipped down Pennsylvania avenue in a chrome and yellow supercharged roadster.

Most interesting of the commission's curiosa now on display are application and examination blanks of Col. Charles Lindbergh, Knute Rockne and a character whose name is "Willie ⅝ Smith," all of whom once applied for civil service jobs.

There are innumerable documents of Theodore Roosevelt, of the time when he was a commissioner, an old double-keyboard typewriter out of the organization's past, and a postoffice register listing one A. Lincoln as postmaster—at $55.70 annually—of New Salem, Ill. The future President was 26 at the time. The document is believed to be the first Government paper ever listing his name.

Notes: Senator Ellender, who left town with the gavel's fall, is intending to return with a bagful of gunpowder for future hearings on employe grievances. His hearings last spring—memorably disconcerting to a number of Federal chiefs—are to be resumed with the next Congress . . . The American Federation of Government Employes, which will hold its annual convention September 11 at Atlantic City, is urging its lodges to send in resolutions. The convention should be interesting, with the fight brewing over candidacies for national president; Cecil E. Custer is leading, so far as the lodges in the National Capital are concerned, but with strength gaining on the side of James E. Campbell, of Cincinnati, a national vice president, and Henry C. Iler, a national organizer. Popular James B. Burns, a vice president, of San Francisco, has been mentioned as a possible favorite for national president, but, so far as is known, he himself has said nothing on the score. There has come a proposal for the A. F. G. E. to add to its staff a full-time legislative representative and Col. Charles I. Stengle, who will not be a candidate for re-election, might get such a post. He is willing . . . The Civil Service Commission has received a letter from Wong Yuck Chor, who is Governor of the Kwangsi Provincial Government of China, requesting information on the American civil service. In spite of the undeclared war, he says, "our internal reforms and reconstructions are going on at even greater speed. One of our recent projects in this province is to build up our civil service," says he. It might be replied to the brave Chinese that one of our recent projects was to build up our civil service, also. But the plans hit several snags.

Pueblo Indians Morally Rearmed, Says Park Service

War clouds in Europe probably would drift away if the modern world could study the "valuable lessons on the art of living" demonstrated by long-vanished early Americans who lived in Tuzigoot, Ariz., the National Park Service indicated yesterday.

Ruins of rambling pueblo homes 120 feet above the Verde River in north central Arizona reveal that three prehistoric nations, despite contrasting customs, lived side by side for centuries without one group ever dominating the others, a park service announcement stated.

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

CHAPTER LXIII

HE WAS DIZZY when he stood up. He leaned against the rough trunk of the chinaberry. It was in bloom. The bees buzzed in it and the fragrance was sweet across the spring air. He was ashamed of himself for having taken time to cry. It was no time to cry. He would have to study his way out of it, as Penny did out of things that threatened him. At first he conjectured wildly. He would build a pen for Flag. A pen 10 feet tall. He would gather acorns and grass and berries and feed him there. But it would take all his time to gather feed for a penned animal—Penny was on his back in the bed—the crops would have to be worked—There was no one but himself to do it.

He thought of Oliver Hutto. Oliver would have come and helped him work the crops until Penny was better. But Oliver had gone to Boston and the China Sea, away from the treachery that had swooped down on him. He thought of the Forresters. He regretted bitterly that they were now the Baxters' enemies. Buck would have helped him. Even now—But what could Buck do? A thought struck him sharply. It seemed to him that he could endure to be parted from Flag if he knew that somewhere in the world the yearling was alive. He could think of him, alive and mischievous, carrying his flag-like tail high and merry. He would go to Buck and throw himself on his mercy. He would remind Buck of Fodder-wing, talk of Fodder-wing until Buck's throat choked. Then he would ask him to take Flag in the wagon, as he had taken the bear cubs, to Jacksonville. Flag would be taken to a broad park where people came to look at the animals. He would bound about and be given plenty of feed, and a doe, and every one would admire him. He, Jody, would raise money crops of his own, and once a year he would go and visit Flag. He would save his money and he would get a place of his own, and he would buy Flag back, and they would live together.

He was flooded with excitement. He turned from the clearing up the road to the Forresters', trotting. His throat was dry and his eyes were swollen and smarting. His hope refreshed him and in a little while, when he swung up the Forresters' trail under the live oaks, he felt all right again. He ran to the house and up the steps. He rapped at the open door and stepped inside. There was no one in the room but Pa and Ma Forrester. They sat immobile in their chairs.

He said breathlessly, "Howdy. Where's Buck?"

"Been a long time since you was here," he said.

"Where's Buck, please, sir?"

"Buck? Why, Buck and the hull passel of 'em has rode off to Kentucky, hoss-tradin.'"

"Plantin' time be tradin' time. They'd ruther trade than plow. They figgered they'd make enough, tradin', to buy our rations." The old man spat. "And likely, they will."

"They're all gone?"

"Ever' one of 'em. Pack and Gabby'll be back in April."

Ma Forrester said, "Heap o' good it do a woman to birth a mess o' young uns and raise 'em and then have 'em all go off to oncet. I will say, they left rations and stacked wood. We won't need nothin' 'til some of 'em's back in April."

"April——"

"Come set with us, boy. I'd be proud to cook dinner for you. Raisin' puddin,' eh? You and Fodder-wing allus loved my raisin' puddin.'"

"I got to go," he said. "I thank you."

He turned back.

HE BURST OUT desperately, "What would you do, did you have a yearlin' et up the corn and you couldn't keep it out no-way and your Pa told you to go shoot it?"

They blinked at him. Ma Forrester cackled.

Pa Forrester said, "Why, I'd go shoot it."

He realized that he had not made the matter clear.

He said, "Supposin' it was yearlin' you loved like you-all loved Fodder-wing?"

Pa Forrester said, "Why, love's got nothin' to do with corn. You cain't have a thing eatin' the crops. Lessen you got boys like mine, has got other ways o' makin' a livin.'"

Ma Forrester asked, "Hit that fawn you carried here last summer for Fodder-wing to put a name to?"

"That's him. Flag," he said. "Cain't you-all take him? Fodder-wing would of takened him."

"Why, we got no better way'n you o' keepin' him. He'd not stay here, no-how. What's 4 mile to a yearlin' deer?"

He said, "Well, good-by," and went away.

The Forrester clearing was desolate without the big men and their horses. They had taken most of the dogs with them. Only a mangy pair remained, chained at the side of the house, scratching themselves mournfully. He was glad to get away again.

He would walk to Jacksonville with Flag himself. He looked about for something to make a halter by which to lead him, so that he would not turn and run home, as he had done on the Christmas hunt. He hacked laboriously at a grapevine with his pocket knife. He looped a length of it around Flag's neck and set off to the northeast. The trail came out somewhere near Hopkins Prairie, he knew, on the Fort Gates road on which he and Penny had intercepted the Forresters. Flag was docile for a time under the leash, then grew impatient of the restraint and tugged against it.

Jody said, "How come you to grow up so unlawful?"

It wore him out, trying to coax the yearling into going willingly. At last he gave it up and took off the grapevine halter. Flag was then perversely content to keep in sight. In the afternoon, Jody found himself tired with a fatigue born of hunger. He had left the house without breakfast. He had wanted only to get away. He looked along the road for berries to eat, but it was too early and there were none. The blackberries had not yet finished blooming. He chewed some leaves, as Flag was doing, but they made him feel emptier than before. His feet dragged. He lay down by the road in the sun for a rest and induced Flag to lie beside him. He was rugged with hunger and misery and the strong March sun on his head. He fell asleep. When he awakened, Flag had gone. He followed his tracks. They led in and out of the scrub, then turned back to the road and continued evenly toward home.

There was nothing to do but follow. He was too weary to think further. He reached Baxters Island after dark. A candle burned in the kitchen. The dogs came to him. He patted them to quiet them. He crept close silently and peered in. Supper was over. His mother sat in the candle-light, sewing her endless patchwork pieces. He was trying to make up his mind whether to go in or not, when Flag galloped across the yard. He saw his mother lift her head and listen.

HE SLIPPED hurriedly beyond the smoke-house and called Flag in a low voice. The yearling came to him. He crouched at the corner. His mother came to the kitchen door and threw it open. A bar of light lay across the sand. The door closed. He waited a long time until the light went out in the kitchen. He allowed time for her to go to bed and to sleep. He prowled inside the smoke-house and found the remainder of the smoked bear-meat. He hacked off a strip. It was hard and dry, but he chewed on it. He supposed Flag had fed on buds in the woods, but he could not bear to think of him hungry. He went to the corn-crib and took two ears of corn and shelled them and fed the kernels to him. He chewed some kernels himself. He thought longingly of the cold cooked food that must be in the kitchen safe but he dared not go in after it. He felt like a stranger and a thief. This was the way the wolves felt, he thought, and the wild-cats and the panthers and all the varmints, looking in at the clearing with big eyes and empty bellies. He made a bed in a stall at the lot with an armful of the scant remaining marsh-grass hay. He slept there with Flag beside him, not quite warm enough through the chill March night.

He awakened after sunrise, stiff and miserable. Flag was gone. He went reluctantly but compelled to the house. At the gate he heard his mother's voice raised in a storm of anger. She had discovered the shotgun where he had leaned it against the smoke-house wall. She had discovered Flag. She had discovered, too, that the yearling had made the most of the early hours and had fed, not only across the sprouting corn, but across a wide section of the cow-peas. He went helplessly to her to meet her wrath. He stood with his head down while she flailed him with her tongue.

She said finally, "Git to your Pa. For oncet, he's with me."

Penny said gently, "How come you not to do what I told you?"

4-H Boys Crowd Maryland U. 'Dude' Classes

'Good Grooming' and 'Social Courtesy' Found Most Popular Courses

The city slicker won't have a thing on Maryland farm boys attending 4-H Club Week at College Park, because they are learning to be "dudes" thmselves. And what is more, they like the idea.

E. G. Jenkins, State Boys Club agent, revealed yesterday at the opening of the twenty-first annual convention at the University of Maryland, that two of the most popular courses among the boys were "social courtesy" and "good grooming."

The latter course was started last year, and attracted the largest attendance of any class. This year, by popular demand, the former was added.

Ask Frank Questions

Miss Maude A. Bean, home demonstration agent at Cumberland, Md., who has charge of the courses, said the boys were even more interested in their personal appearance than the girls.

"They are very frank and not the least bit embarrassed about asking how their hair should be combed or what clothes to wear for various occasions," she said.

"Emphasis is placed on care of the body, comfortable and appropriate attire. One should be comfortable in his clothes or else he is self-conscious.

Boys Enter Style Show

"Last year there was so much enthusiasm that 12 of the boys participated in the style revue, which previously had been exclusively for the girls. The style show this year will be held on Friday, and I'm sure a number of boys will take part."

Montgomery County, with an enrollment of 90 boys and girls, led the State at the close of registration yesterday. More than 500 4-H members are in attendance.

Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the university, will welcome the delegates at an assembly today. Other speakers will include Dr. Thomas B. Symons, dean of the College of Agriculture, and Mildred Oursler, of Anne Arundel County.

One Boy Raises Hogs

Many of the club members have undertaken projects which may lead to a permanent occupation. Daniel Poole, 19, of Jefferson, Md., has raised 800 hogs in the past seven years. At present he has a prime herd of 85.

Staley Hahn, 18, of Frederick, Md., is a hog and dairy cattle farmer and president of the Frederick County Ayreshire Breeders Association. Both boys are regular attendants at the annual club week.

Mrs. Claude B. (Mother) Norton, veteran 4-H Club leader of Brookemont, Md., and her daughter, Mrs. Russell Umstead, of Laytonsville, Md., also a club leader, were on hand with groups of youngsters.

June Barnes and Janice Meeks, club leaders trained by Mrs. Norton, also brought a delegation of youngsters from the Conduit road section of Montgomery County.

Ship Sideswipes Iceberg in Fog, Keeps Going as 3 Craft Rush Aid

Boston, Aug. 7.—Barely escaping disaster when she nudged an iceberg as she crept across the North Atlantic in an early morning fog, the Canadian Pacific freighter Beaverhill continued tonight on her course for London, apparently little damaged.

She was approximately 100 miles off the coast of Newfoundland, above the most-used steamship lanes, when she struck at 5:30 a. m. (Eastern Standard time) this morning.

Such accidents have been rare since the luxury liner Titanic struck an iceberg in the same waters on April 14, 1912, and sank with a loss of 1,517 lives, and not a life has been lost as a result of a brush with a berg since the international ice patrol was established in 1914.

This morning's first terse radio report that the Beaverhill had struck an iceberg—most dreaded of navigation hazards in the northern seas—swung the bows of three vessels toward her position.

The liner Ausonia, first to reach the 10,000-ton freighter's position, stood by as the steamship Montclair and the United States Coast Guard Cutter Champlain, on international ice patrol, picked their way to her aid through a dense fog.

Carries Crew of 74

Then, the skipper reported "No. 4 double-bottom tank damaged," but his vessel's inner hull apparently intact and taking no water, and he added the reassuring note that the Beaverhill would reach London as scheduled on August 13.

That was the only word from the 503-foot vessel, out of Montreal with a crew of 74.

Polish Students Will Be Feted

Twenty students and members of the faculties, Georgetown, George Washington, and Catholic Universities, have been invited to meet the visitors.

Groundwork Likely For Legislative Action During Next Session

The District Commissioners and Senator King (Democrat), Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, will meet at 11 a. m. today to keep alive plans for reorganization of the District government. They are expected to lay groundwork for studies that may develop into legislative proposals for the next session of Congress.

Various District officials have been ordered to prepare suggestions for revamping their own departments and reports that are completed will be considered today.

Prior to adjournment of Congress, King indicated his intention to continue efforts for reorganization. He and House District Committee Chairman Randolph (Democrat), West Virginia, laid plans for public hearings this fall.

King has indicated he has no definite plans in mind, but is known to favor retention of the three Commissioners, giving them added power, rather than installing a new position of city administrator, as proposed in the Kennedy plan.

Randolph, backed by his committee, favors extension of suffrage to the District on local affairs and is expected to strive for inclusion of such a provision as an integral part of any legislative recommendation.

Nurses Protest Hiring Request At Sanitorium

Three registered nurses have asked Commissioner Hazen to reconsider the request to the Civil Service Commission for the certification at Glenn Dale Sanatorium of several additional colored nurses.

"Glenn Dale Sanatorium at present employs 140 colored workers as compared to 174 white employes. This seems a fair representation of the colored population of Washington in the employment of this institution," said the nurses, Evo O. Carroll, Elisabeth Wagner and Lottie J. Eggleston.

The District Commissioners, they pointed out, have supreme authority in handling District legislation, "and unless this order specifically states that the nurses must be colored, which it does not . . . can you not do as the Veterans' Bureau does in carrying out this ruling?"

Trapped Climber Dies of Exposure

Estes Park, Colo., Aug. 7 (AP).—Rescue workers today lowered Gerald Clark, 30, Denver mountain climber, down a 2,000-foot precipice on the east face of Long's Peak, where he had been trapped 24 hours, but he died, aparently of exposure.

D. C. Slayer Loses Fight for Life

James Bostic, 26, colored, yesterday apparently lost his last chance to escape electrocution two weeks from Friday, by a decision of the Court of Appeals. His only remaining hope was a plea to the Supreme Court, which once has refused to hear him.

Bostic was convicted in 1937 of killing William Tuckson, jr., 16, colored. His appeal was denied and his electrocution arranged. Then Attorney Martin S. Vilas applied for a writ of habeas corpus, claiming that the indictment of Bostic was faulty and that the lawyer who defended Bostic at his trial was so inexperienced that, as a matter of law, the man did not have a lawyer, as guaranteed by the Constitution.
